Scotland Yard Ex-Aide Tells of Ism Spies

Col. Palmer Calls Krivitsky Victim Of Soviet Terror

A horde of ruthless Communist, Nazi and Japanese agents is operating throughout the United States, according to a statement today by Gol. Casimir Pilenas Palmer, London investigator for Scotland Yard.

In an interview with a New York
Journal and American representative at his apartment, 140 W. 105th st.. Col. Palmer declared:

st., Col. Paimer declared:

"General Walter G. Erivitsky may be a suicide as reported. But there is no question in my mind as to how it happened—he was driven to his act.

'HAS MANY BECKETS.'

"Eussia will let no man live who has vital information. The Soviet Government has many secrets it wants to keep, and it lives in great fear that former agents may reveal these secrets to other governments.

"The more accurate statement is, of course, that there are no former agents of the OGPU. They are either kidnaped and returned to Moscow to their doom, or they are liquidated wherever they are found."

Col. Palmer, who for 22 years served with the British Secret Service, and for two years with the U.S. Army Intelligence, added:

"As one illustration of the Seviet methods — on Jan. 16 last, a man called to my home, introducing himself as A. Walter. "RECOGNIZED HIM."

Though I had never met film before, I recognized him as Alberi Walter, who receives thousands of dollars weekly from Russia for subversive work among seamen's unions. He is a German and has the guitural accent.

"He said he was an agent for the U. S. Navy Intelligence, and saked me for the whereabouts of a German captain who had been involved in the Black Tom explosion."

(Col. Palmer served as investigator for the U. S. Mixed Claims Commission that adjudicated the Black Tom claim against the German Government. He was, incidentally, one time chief of the Lithuanian Military Intelligence, and has important connections in all parts of the world.

Wondering at the audacity of the man, Col. Palmer asked to see his credentials. The visitor rose silently, took his coat and strode out of the apartment.

SPURN MOSCOW SUMMONS.

Further illustrating Soviet methods, Col. Palmer told of a party of seven men, one a former vice-president of Amtorg, who had been to Russia and returned with special tasks assigned. One in particular had received a good deal of confidential information, directly from Stalin.

In a short while, several of them were "invited" to go back to Moscow. But they dreaded the summons; and they did not obey it.

As for the kidnaping of victims. Col. Palmer recalled the terror that swept over White Russian emigres in Paris when in 1935-6 two former Imperial Generals, Kutyepoff; and Miller, were snatched off the streets of Paris and returned to. Moscow for the executioner.

Gen. Kutyepoff had been in charge of anti-Soviet propagands. White Gen. Miller was head of the White Rhasian Officers' Society.

Friends Continue Krivitsky Inquiry

Unofficial inquiry continued today into the death by shooting of General aWlter G. Krivitsky last Monday in a Washington hotel.

Friends of the one-time chief of Soviet Military Intelligence in Western Europe scanned every bit of evidence, dubious of the suicide verdict returned after a three-day coroner's inquest.

Krivitsky's body was cremated yesterday, in a coffin marked with his real name, "Samuel Ginsberg." at Bresh Pond Crematory in Magpeyn. Those present included his widow, Mrs. Tanya Krivitsky, and its attorney, Louis Waldman.

"Liquidated" by the Red Terror

Krivitsky's Dramatic Career Comes to Shadowy End Here

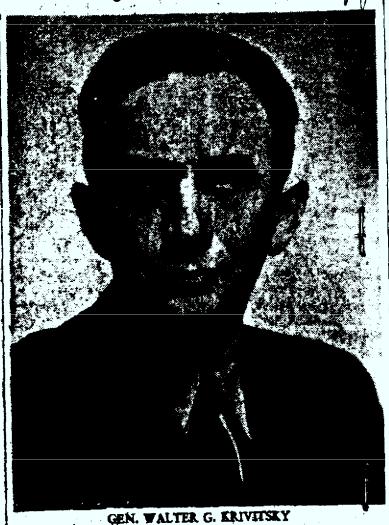

By Edward T. Folliard

The Stalin terror finally liquidated Gen. Walter G. Krivitsky last week.

The nervous, furtive-eyed little man, who consorted with Moscow spies and assassins for 17 years and tried to dodge them for the last four, reached the end, of his shadowy road here in Washington.

Regardless of the suicide certificate issued here by Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald, one thing seems fairly certain: In the Kremlin, the name of Krivitsky will take its place on Josef Stalin's "purge" roster, a roster that contains the names of 35.000 murdered Red army victims alone, not to mention the 400,000 persons jailed and exiled.

The bloody Russian dictator must have wanted Krivitaky's liquidation very much, for the former Red army intelligence officer was a dangerous and effective man—far more so than the thousands who made their fantistic "confessions" and marched before the firing squads in the old country. How Krivitaky was liquidated probably was unimportant.

phere, is now the natural headquarters for conspirative contacts and cimmunications, because Soviet-American trade flows mostly across the Pacific.

Hundreds of Stalin's "activists" from all countries had been gathered in Spain until the Loyalist cause fell. Murder, official and otherwise had been their daily work for three years.

As a source for daring and desperate agents the OGPU, and other branches of the Soviet foreign services, must now find them invaluable. Droves of them have come to the United States as stowaways or sailors, or by way of Mexico, which is now overrun with these ex-Chekists from Spain.

Calls Hans Bruesse 'Fanatic Activist'

In the past two years I have run into several notorious OGPU agents. Since my book "Out of the Night" appeared, there have been a series of efforts to trace my whereabouts. Mysterious voices have called at my publisher's office.

One spy mentioned in my pages showed up personally, demanding to see me. Strangers have invaded the home of my American wife's family, seeking to find me.

On a day when I intentionally led certain inquisitive people to think that I would be away from my hide-out in the country, a Packard strove into the secluded place. I saw the uninvited visitors and lead no doubt they were making a check-up of the lay of the land—surveillance always precedes an attempt at violence. (Naturally I have abandoned that hide-out.)

Hans Bruesse, whom Krivitsky suspected of being his "shadow," is a young and fanatic activity. Even more sinister agents, I have reason to believe, are now at work in the United States.

The authorities are said to be looking for George Mink, the Philadelphia tast driver who blossomed into one of Stälin's bloodiest took: among his numerous victims in Spain were a number of American boys who had volunteered idealistically to fight for Stalin there, without knowing what they were wathing stale.

Perhaps the worst of the kidnar ships, which used to operate between London and Leningrad making stops at Hamburg, wacalled "Kooperatzya," meaning Cooperation. It was accident, no irony.

The SS. Neva, a Boviet ship which made stops at Spanish ports had the honor of serving as kidnap ship for one of the mosprominent German Communis leaders, Heinz Neumann.

Under the pseudonym of Enrique he served as Stalin's chie Comintern agent in Spain up to the time of the civil war. After the war started, the OGPU tool over Communist affairs in the country and Neumann was ordered to return.

When he refused, he was simply kidnaped, packed aboard the Nevand landed at Odessa. Soon thereafter he was shot,

It is my guess that Julia Stuar Poyntz, the American agent, wh disappeared from her room at the American Woman's Association in the Summer of 1937, was kid napped and shipped to Russia.

It is by this time known that as OGPU man named Epstein, an also using the name Joseph Ber son, had been friendly with he and was the last person to hav been in touch with her,

Everyone remembers some of the blood-curdling incidents in the notorious purge in Nazi Germany in June, 1934.

The same method of indirect self-annihilation marked the end of other blacklisted leaders.

To those of us who have lived But no one has surpassed the close to the fantastic drama of Communists in the application of this sinister form of murder with the victim's own hand. In connection with Joseph Stalin's great blood purges of recent years, there were hundreds of suicides. Only the politically naive will believe that they were all voluntary.

We cannot know how many of them consented to kill themselves at one blow as the alternative to death by slow torture at the hands

There is every reason to suspect, at least, that prominent Bolshe-viks like Michael Tomsky, General Gamarnik and other alleged suicides ended their own lives as the price for saving the lives of people dear to them.

Suggests Krivitsky Feared Torture of Kin

Imagine a man like Krivitsky passionately attached to his wife and his 7-year-old ann, given the choice between killing himself and having his family packed off to Russia for torture by the kidnaping route which so many others had traveled before them.

This is purely speculative. But I happen to know that such things have happened elsewhere in these cruel years. Suppose that Krivitsky had been confronted with a threat to his loved ones backed up by a frantic note from his wife asking him to save her and their son. The forging of such a note, of source, is child's play to the experts on Stalin's foreign police

Even if the hand that wrote the farewell notes and the finger that pulled the trigger of the revolver were Krivitsky's, the possibility of a deal under duress is decidedly not eliminated. There notes sound phony to me. They contain just the sort of trivia a clever agent, having familiarised himself with the domestic life of the victim. would dictate.

Hounded From Jobs by WPA Reds, Two Charge

by William Hendersok.

Two Americans, dismissed from their WPA jobs, yesterday made the "incredible' Krivitsky case believable by telling what allegedly happened to them when they refused to serve the objectives either of Stalin or Hitler while trying to make a living.

One of them, Miss Marie Mitchel a young artist told a remarkable story of how terroristic methods of the OGPU pattern—which hounded Krivitsky, too—had forced her to flee this city to Florida.

The other, Frank Lee, World War veteran, related his alleged experiences after falling into disfavor with both the Nazis and Communists, both represented in key jobs in the Workers Alliance, which, according to recent court testimony, dominates welfare work here.

Hears Nazis Praised

Lee, living with his wife at 500 W. 169th St., climaxed his story with the declaration that his former superior in the WPA, still an executive in that body, told him with emphasis:

"We need a swastika in this country. There is nothing good without a German brand."

Lee, having borne arms for democracy across the seas, and true to America's colors, protested—and found himself in double jeopardy, he says, because he had already refused to become a member of the Workers Alliance.

He says he was dismissed from the WPA after four years of service—but that isn't the end.

He says he found employment as assistant manager of a midtown bar and grill (the Metropole, 48th St. and 7th Ave.) and tifut after he was there only a week, the manager told him:

your last job (with the WPA) which makes it impossible for me to keep you. These people are in a position to make trouble for us, and we can't afford that. So you'll have to go."

Discharged Again

Lee, who has his wife and a young son of his sister to support, got another job with a big midtown restaurant (Diamond Jim Brady, Broadway and 42nd St.), and held it three weeks.

Then the manager told him:

"I like your appearance, and I like your work. But I find it impossible to keep you, because I might get into trouble if I do."

Lee's story is that he served the WPA for four years as a technician, having supervision of the manufacture of school furniture.

"A few weeks before I received a slip last August stating a reduction in force was necessary and I was being dropped, a Communist member of the Alliance told me I would be helping myself if I joined the organization," the World War veteran said.

"I replied: Tm working for the Federal Government and I have no right to belong.' His answer was: Then we'll get rid of you eventually, veteran or no veteran.'"

Lee added there were 25 technicians in his group, and he was the only one of American birth. The others were chiefly Slavs, Germans, Italians—"all kinds."

"One day the men were making some furniture for a school," Lee went on. "There were several wooden crosspieces, resembling a swastika. The German supervisor over me pointed to them and said, "That's the kind of flag we need."

The veteran identified h

superior by name and also another Nazi, who told him:

"The Nazis are the best people on earth. Your children are not properly trained in American schools. Only the Nazis can teach children prop-er knowledge and precision."

As proof that there had been no complaint against his work until he fell into disfavor with the Reds and the Nazis, Lee quoted from his monthly rating cards.

Two of these were marked "excellent," one "good," and the fourth "fair." The latest marking came after he refused to join the Alliance, he said.

Russian General Came To Capital Seeking Haven, Says Lawyer

By FRASER EDWARDS

Hounded by the dreaded Soviet OGPU for exposing secrets of the Stalin regime, Gen. Walter G. Krivitaky, erstwhile chief of the Russian military intelligence service for Western Europe, was found anot to death yesterday in the Believue Hotel, off Union Station Plaza, under circumstances which caused Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald to withhold a certificate of suicide.

Although the coroner had prepared a suicide certificate and Folice Inspector Bernard W. Thompson, after a careful examination of the fifth floor hotel room where Erivitaky died, said "it looks like suicide." Louis Waldman, of New York, attorney for the Russian general, charged his olient "definitely was not a suicide."

Believed Victim of OCEU

A good many things indicated that Krivitsky committed suicide in the Bellevue Hotel here: the locked room, the temple wound the 38 automatic, and the three arewell notes.

There was nothing, however, to indicate that he wanted to die, nothing that suggested any of the commonplace motives for suicide—ill health, money troubles, or romantic difficulties.

"I want to live very badly," he said in his note to Tanya, his wife, and Alek, his 7-year-old son, "but it is impossible."

WHY WAS IT impossible? Wishe afraid of Hans B—, the "Rud Judas," the Stalin trigger-man, who recently arrived in New York? Had four years of dread, of dodging the terror, driven him to the point where he preferred ideath to such a haunted life?

Some of his friends didn't think so. Boris Shub, who served as Krivitsky's interpreter before the Dies Committee and helped him with some of his magazine articles, sought to explode that theory in these words:

"If Krivitsky had decided to die, he could have done it much better and more easily by going into service with the British intelligence. I know for a fact that had received an offer from the British but turned it slows. He was the sort of man who would have preferred a useful death."

What then could have moved this man who is said to have borne a "fanatical" love for his wife and hoy, who is reputed to have received $25,000 for his Saturday Evening Post articles—what could have moved him to buy a gun in Charlottesville, Va., register in a Washington hotel, and destroy hijnself?

THE ANSWER, according to men who know Soviet Russia and its dread OGPU, is that Stalin's agents made a "dekl" with Krivitsky. If Krivitsky, one-time Red army chief of Intelligence for western Europe and twice deforated for espionage work, would kill himself, all would be well; if he refused, then vengeance would be visited on his wife and boy—his "Dear Tanya" and his "Dear Alek."

If Krivitsky would agree to kill himself, of course, the men assigned to get him could truly boast of having committed the "perfect crime." They would be guilty of threats, yes, but the man to swhom they made the threats would be dead.

O A NATIVE-BORN American, reared in an atmosphere of law and order, such dreadful business must seem funtastic. Why couldn't Krivitaky tell the policet, Why couldn't be sak for protection?

Krivitaky gave the answer himself when he was here testifying before the Dies Committee, talling how stalin had agents in the United States Army and Navy, and giving other explosive testimony. The committee ordered a bodyward for Krivitsky, but he declared, saying:

"They (the OGPU) never forget.
If I had a hundred bodyguard,
they would still get me."

"GEN. KRIVITSKY, you are Schmelka Ginzburg!" raged for New Masses when his articles togan appearing in the Saturday Evening Post.

It was true that he was born Samuel Ginsburg on June 28, 1899, in the western Ukrains. He adopted the name of "Walter G. Krivijsky" when he joined the Communist Party in 1919. But the effort of the New Masses and the Daily Worker to make him out a "liar and a traitor" collapsed with a bang in the fall of 1839.

In a Saturday Evening Post article that appeared in April of that year, Krivitsky predicted that Hitler and Stalin, supposedly flerce enemies, would enter into an alliance. The Communist newspapers and magazines in this country ridiculed the article, and Earl Browder said a Soviet-Nazi acsord was about as likely as his election "as president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States."

The Hitler-Stalin pact, foreignher of the European war, was annolinced the following August, and Krivitaky's stock soared, Krivitaky's expose of Stalin's blood purge and his inside story of Rusgis's ignoble role in the Spanish givil war caused much disflusionshent smoong "fellow travelers" in the United States. The pact he had predicted drove thousands of them away from the left.

The Communist Party, no longer the justy outfit it used to be back in the days of the Spanish Rivil War, will doubtliss breathe easier now that Krivitsky is gone.

lin Terror Krivitsky Death

Probably the most talked-of writer in America todayand a man marked for death by the Soviet Secret Policeis Jan Valtin, author of the sensational best-seller, "Out of the Night."

An ex-member of the Communist International Espionage Service, himself, he knows their ruthlessness and their determination to blot out any "ex" agent, such as was Gen. Walter G. Krivitsky, strangely dead in Washington this week. That's why Jan Valtin, who knows the ways of the OGPU and the Nazi Gestapo which apes it, hides his face from the world while masquerading under a name he frankly adapted from "Valentine."

He has emerged from seclusion briefly to write the following story exclusively for the Chicago Herald-American, in which he discusses the Krivitsky shooting and gives a terrifying glimpse of OGPU technique.

An article on Jan Valtin's book, "Out of the Night," appears in the Pictorial Review section of this edition.

Ordered to Canada

Matthews said Krivitsky was ordered by the State Department to go to Canada e little more than a year ago. He was then awaiting deportation at Ellis Island and his departure and destination were kept secret at the time, due to Krivitsky's fears of OGPU agents.

Although Matthews said he understood the State Department was to permit Krivitsky to reenter this country from Canada with the regular quota of immigrants, he had not seen Krivitsky for a year. He understood the Russian still was in Canada and had no information he was in this country.

Krivitaky, Matthews said, jived for a while in New York city es a Riverside Drive address. That was shortly before he testified before the Dies Committee.

Matthews said he had difficulty in persuading Krivitsky to testify before the Dies Committee, be-fore which he appeared October 11, 1939. He said he had heard Krivitsky was hiding in this counkrivitsky was hiding in this country, and after several months located him in New York State about 100 miles from New York city. Matthews said he was driven secretly to the place, where Krivitsky was living with his wife and one of his children.

When the investigator lived

When the investigator urged Krivitsky to testify, the Russian said:

"As sure as I do, they'll kill me."
Erivitaky came to the United States about three years ago after he had been expelled from the Communist party and lost his Soviet citizenship following a break with Stalin, whom he had served as child of the served military po as chief of the secret military police in Western Europe

In addition to testifying that Russian secret agents were active in the United States, Krivitaky wrote a stries of articles for the Saturday Evening Post exposing Communist world intrigues.

Always Feared for Life

Waldman said the embittered Russian, last survivor of the old military clique and possessor of secrets unknown even to Stalin.
was constantly in fear of his life. He added:

"Several months ago, Erivitsky noticed he was being followed one afterneon while he was in the vicinity of Times Square, in New York. He knew a reporter on the Times, so he dashed into the Times office and stayed there for several hours until the man who was shadowing him finally left the vicinity."

Erivitally had decided thib continued. The bouldone it much befor an easily by going into services.

Waldman are ted he would ask the Federal Bureau of Investigation to cooperate with the Metropolitan Police in solving the entire affair. He said there were circumstances connected with the case which made an exhaustive investigation imperative.

After examining the three notes found in Krivitsky's room, Waldman was still unshaken in his opinion that the Russian general had been murdered. He declared the notes "could have been forged." but did declare that "everything was physically consistent with suicide." He said:

"It is well known that the OGPU has specimens of Krivitsky's handwriting in every language. The OGPU is reputedly expert in forging, including the work of counterfeiting currency." _

Intrigue Veils Case

All the mystery of Old World intrigue was thrown about the case by the delay in the announcement of the death by the police, the action of the coroner, and the charges made by Waldman and the threats made on Krivitsky's life as revealed by Dr. J. B. Matthews, investigator for the Dies committee on un-American activities, who identified the body at the District Morgue.

When Waldman arrived last night from New York, he insisted that his client was the victim of the OGPU and revealed circumstances which led him to that belief. He declared that Krivitsky had no motive for suicide, but on the contrary had every reason to live.

Bought Refuge in Virginia

Waldman said the former Russian general left New York either Tuesday or Wednesday of last week for Charlottesville, Va., where he was seeking a home for his wife and child. Krivitsky feared attack by the OGPU agents, whom he told Waldman had been trailing him recently in New York.

When Krivitsky failed to return in How York last Friday to appear before the Coudert-Rapp committee investigating subversive activities in the New York schools, the attorney said he became worried for fear his client had met with foul play. After-slewing the body at the Morgue, Waldman repeated

Assassination Attempted

"Hans" was reputed to be the Stalinist killer who tried to assassinate Krivitsky in Marseilles in 1937, just after the general had broken with Stalin and was expelled from the Communist party and was forced to flee from Russia, the widow said.

Pirst positive identification of the body was made by Dr. Matthews. who said:

"There can be no question about this being the body of the man known as Gen, Walter G. Krivitsky. I am absolutely certain of hat. The last time I talked with General Krivitsky, which was about three months ago, he said. They are going to get me sure Don't you ever believe that I will be a suicide. They have shot everybody else and they are going to get me sure.

While officials of the Federal Bureau of Investigation said agents had not yet been assigned to the case, they were "very much interested in the case."

Meanwhile, Dr. Christopher Murphy, deputy coroner, ordered paraffin tests made of the 38-caliber automatic pistol, which was found on the bed beside Krivitsky's body when it was discovered at 9:30 a.m. by Thelma Jackson, 21, a maid, at the Bellevue Rotel. These tests were expected to show the position of the weapon when the death shot was fired,

Three Notes Discovered

Despite the charges of Waldman and the strange circumstance surrounding the death of the Russian general, police were inclined to the theory of suicide. Three notes were found in the dead man's room—one in English, one in Russian and another in German. They were all addressed to different per

Tension Seen in Writing

After an examination of the three notes, Ira Guilickson, handwriting expert of the Police Department, declared "there is no question about the same man who signed the hotel register, writing all three suicide notes." There were indications also, Gullickson said, the three notes were written on different days or at least at dif-ferent times. He said the handwriting showed the growing ten sion of the writer.

Early today, Coroner MacDonald said that while he was convinced of suicide, he would not close the case until the charges of murder made by Waldman had been either proven or disproven. Waldman continued 'it was "a planned murder, which was made. to appear a suicide."

While Dr. Matthews did not take the same adament stand as Russian agents in t Waldman, he said Krivitsky had told him in their last conversation about three months ago that "they," meaning the OGPU, "are going to get me sure" and warned him not to believe "I will be a suicide" if the Russian general was found dead.

While name of the notes left by Krivitsky made a definite state ment of suicidal intent, one of the notes, addressed to Waldman, asked him to make provision for his family. It was not until after the police had communicated with Waldman that they learned the true adentity of the dead man, who was first identified as Walter Poref and then as Samuel Ginsberg Krivitsky's real name.

Body Mantified

Waldman was met at Union Station by Dr. Matthews and Inspector Thompson, chief of detectives, and driven directly to the District Margue, where he identified the body and repeated his earlier charge that his client half been murdered.

7 Mourners Attend Rites of Krivitsky

In the seclusion of a small chapel at Fresh Pond Crematory, Middle Village, Queens, the body of Samuel Ginsburg, a Russian refugee who failed to find haven from Stalin's OGPU in America, was cremated yesterday.

The rites were brief—barely 20 minutes—and were viewed only by Ginsburg's wife, Tanya; five close friends and his attorney, Louis Waldman. The ceremony was no different from the one that preceded it or the two that followed. Only a massing of photographers and reporters set it apart.

Ginsberg—more widely known as Gen. Walter G. Krivitsky—was the central figure in a tragedy with international significance. Found shot to death in a Washington hotel room Monday, he was immediately identified by a Dies Committee investigator—a victim of Stalin's long, red arm.

Case Still Open

In Washington records, Krivitsky is officially listed as a suicide. Because of the many sides to the case, however, police there are holding the case "open" on request of Congressman Dies, to whom Krivitsky gave devastating evidence concerning activities of Red saboteurs and provocateurs in the United States.

Krivitsky's body was taken to the Fairchild Funeral Chapel, 86 Lefferts Pl., Brooklyn, following arrival at Pennsylvania Station Thursday night. Not a mourner appeared until 11 a. m., yesterday, when the attorney brought the cremation permit.

A permit had been refused in Washington because of the confusion of names. To get it hear, the wife signed an affidavit that the family name was Ginsburg.

No Cortege

There was no cortege. Ars. Krivitsky arrived with friends about ten minutes after the body, and went immediately to the chapel. After the rites, the party fled by a side door.

No comment was made by Mrs Krivitsky who, with her son Alexander, 7, is staying with friends in Flatbush.

An FBI denial that it was in vestigating was issued yesterday by Robert A. Guerin, second it charge of the New York district, as the Mirror had predicted. Observers were inclined to discount its importance in view of the fact that since Krivitsky gave all his information directly to Dies, the probe was probably being collected from Washington under the new "peace pact" between I am and the FBI.

New Leader Office Raided-Hand of Ogpu Seen

Members of the Social Democratic Federation reported yesterday that during the last week-end the federation offices and the editorial room of The New Leader, federation organ, both at 7 East Fifteenth Street-were mysteriously invaded.

Nothing of value was taken. It was obvious that some one had opened the safe in the federation headquarters on the second floor of the building, apparently in search of documents. A small amount of money in the safe was exposed but money in the sale was exposed but left untouched.

In both places papers were scattered, files disarranged, books strewn about as if the intruders thought they might find important papers or letters.

Since neither office would have yielded any worth-while loot, fed-eration officials seemed inclined to believe the visit might have some association with the General Rrivitsky case. The general and some of his friends were contributors to The New Leader.

Yictor Riesel, editor of The New Lader, said he thought the visit wight have been made by Ogput gents possibly hoping to find unpublished Krivitsky data.

The Krivitsky Case

Lest there be any misunderstanding, standard of living had ample for sevassert that Walter Krivitsky has been murdered that there is ample evidence to prove that if he committed suicide it was not because he wanted to die but because he wanted his wife and child to live, and that therefore even a suicide becomes murder-as a forced suicide must be.

Furthermore, I assert that, for reasons not known to me but which I can reconstruct, the police of the city of Washington, from the start, falled to follow ordinary police routines employed when a body is found under circumstances, that the FBI, in spite of the fact that such a crime might be linked to the national defense, has refused to intervens in the case. I call attention to the fact that Walter Krivitsky had been of assistence to the State Department, the FBI and the Dies committee, and that certainly the FBI was obligated to protect him from Stalin's ganguters who are operating in Washington, the capital of the United States, as they operated in Mexico, where they managed to kill Trotsky in his own house

There are many curious factors in the murder of Krivitsky which I shall bring out from time to time. But to me it is most interesting that the whole affair follows specifically an OGPU murder, and yet none of our police officers in the national capital recognized it as such, just as the New York city police have never been able to understand the political significance of the Juliet Poyntz kidnaping. Stalin conducts a vendetta in the United States and no one pays any attention to it.

Let me show the lines of this pattern: Walter Krivitsky broke with the OGPU and published a series of articles in the Saturday Evening Post and a book-both of which have stood the test of time. They prove Stalin to head a world murder organization. Krivitsky achieved a certain reputation and he is called down to Washington to testify before the Dies committee and a Grand Jury; the FBI and the State Department utilize his expert information. He went to England and placed at the disposal of the British government valuable information. Then he returned to the United States via Canada.

This activity continues until it becomes American national policy to appease Souset Russia, to sell her machine tools which are badly needed in thir country, to permit her to export from the United States supplies which find their way into Germany. The moral embargo against shipments to Russia is lifted in spite of the fact that that contradicts all-out aid to Britain. Suddenly, Krivitaky is no longer being consulted. But he had earned considerable money and on the basis of his ment of Stalin.

eral years. He wants to buy a farm. to spend his time writing, farming and perhaps teaching somewhere. I have made full inquiries among his closest friends and associates and find that he was personally cheerful, happy, but not optimistic about the future relations tween this country and Soviet Russia.

He had, however, had some warning of what would happen to him. According to my information a former associate, Paul Wohl, warned him to beware of a certain OGPU killer who was in this country. Who is Paul Wohl? He had formerly been employed by the OGPU in Europe under Krivitsky. He had helped Krivitsky to prepare his writings. He even set himself up as a sort of guide to Krivitaky. But they had quarreled and were to longer friends. Should not some one inquire into Paul Wohl's knowledge of the case? How did he know about the killer? Where did he see the killer? How did the killer get into this country?

In the correspondence which Krivitaky left behind, the appearance is given that Krivitsky regrets that he had exposed Stalin and the Russian regime. His letter to his wife is made to appear to be a retraction. It is given to the press in a translation in which this significant sentence is garbled: "Good people will help you; but no enemies of the Soviet Ilnion." Then there is the admission of transgression. This is the usual formula for communist confessions. The other day, we witnessed the spectacle of an American citizen, Clarence Hathaway, humiliating himself, in much the rame manner, as an apology for his failure to be obedient to the party ordita. So, Krivitsky is made to appear to be repentant prentant.

And I am told that his address books do not contain such a name. Krivitsky had many close and intimate friends. He never told them that he was about to retract and denounce himself. But he did tell a stranger, a person whom he casually meets in a restaurant, that he has such a plan! Where does that stranger bob up from? What does he know about all this? What is his past? Is the FBI or are the Washington police trying to find out who Wellington Ros is and what he has to do with Krivitsky's affairs?

The Krivitsky Case

Krivitsky case than can readily be pushed aside. Perhaps this may best be shown in the experience of Louis Waldman, Krivitsky's lawyer. .

On Monday, February 10, at about 3:45 P. M. (mark the time!) Waldman received a notification from the New Fork police to the effect that a man called Ginsberg had committed suicide to a Washington botel and that the Washington police wanted to get in touch with him.

Waldman called Washington and spoke to Chief Inspector Thompson. who told him that a man called Samuel Ginsberg had committed suicide and that they had found Waldman's name among his papers. Waldman saked that the blotter be read to him and this is the information he received:

* "At about 9:30 A. M., February 10, 1941, Walter Poref, alias Samuel Ginsberg, white, 41 years, New York city, was found in an unconscious state, on the bed, in room 532, of the Bellevue Hotel, No. 15 Edward street, N. W., by Elma Jackson, colored, of 1315 h Brown street, B. R., a maid of the above hotel. Walter Poref, aims Sam-uel Ginsberg, was pronounced dead at 121 A. M., February 10, 1941, by Dr. Elsberg of the Emergency Hospital staff. Death was due to a gunshot wound in head. Homicide squad and coroner notified. Investigated by Detective Sergeant D. Quest, who has possession of gun. Body was removed to a morgue."

Note that Krivitsky left three letters, one clearly signed "Walter Krivitsky." The letter, including that full signature, was addressed to Waldman, but nothing was said about a letter to Waldman nor that the police knew that it was Krivitsky who was dead. Why was this information withheld from Krivitsky's lawyer? Why did the Washington police wait from 3:30 A. M. until 3:45 P. M. to notify Waldman. concerning whom they had knowledge from Krivitsky's letter? To whom was such a delay advantageous?

Better still, why was the press to notified? Krivitsky was a man with an international reputation. He had put the finger on Earl Browder and Nick posenburg. He became the subject of national controversy. He had appeared in hearings in Washington. Why did sot the Washington police recognize the name and inform the Or did they recognize the me? It is noteworthy that the first next of the Krivitsky murder can m New York and emanated from Waldman's office. Who killed the story in Washington?

The police loser that the man who registered of the Bellevin Hotel as Poref was also Samuel Ginsberg from en ide tification docum mi which he of. But they also know that he voit by the name of Walter Krivitsky from a letter be left, addressed to Waldman and so signed.

Waldman arrived in Washington at hody in any adjoining room? How fore 11 P. M. He and J. E. Matthews of the that happen?

There are many more details in this mittee went to the mergus.

More queer angles poke out of this tiffed the body that the letters which Rrivitsky left were shown to him. There were also inaccurate translations of the Russian letter addressed to Mrs. Krivitsky and the German letter addressed to Suzanne La Foliette. Were the translations incorrect from carelearness or what? Why was the reference to "enemies of the Soviet Union" emitted?

Waldman and Matthews asked about fingerprints. They were told that no examination had been made of fingerprints either on the glass knobs of the door to room 632 or on the gun. They were told that the gun was ered with blood and that therefore they did not look for fingerprints. I have been informed that glass door knobs are especially good for fingerprints, as is blood on a gun. Inquiries were made concerning the bullet. They were told that it was embedded in the wall and left there.

Waldman, who had spent lots of time with Krivitsky, noted that the last person who said that he saw Krivitsky was a beliboy who said that he brought him sparkling water between 6:30 and 7 P. M. on Sunday. The maid said that she found him at 9:30 A. M. on Monday. Krivitaky was a chain cigarette moker. His usual consumption was at least three packets of cigarettes a day. He smoked more cigarettes when he was under tension. Yet not a single eigerette butt was found in his room when examined by Waldman and the notice lieutenant. None were reported taken away by the police. Is it possible to believe that a chain cigarette moker, contemplating suicide, writing and reading and re-reading his just testaments to his wife, son, lawyer and literary collaborator, would suddenly give up emoking? Is it not rather to be believed that those who were in the room with him realized that the cignient butts might lead to them, and pupping FROM THE rette butts might seed to sover AY. SUN.

moe? Either Waldman or Matthews asked about the door being polted on the in- "E side, which the police claimed was the EARDED BY N.Y. DIVIS case. Quite apart from the fact that there is no evidence that the door was so bolted, how did the colored maid enter the room at $130 A. M.? Did she breek down the bolted door? she send for the hotel carpenter to rip out the bolted door? Not at all. She sened it with her key. If she could water the room at $:30 A. M. on Monday, why are the Washington police so certain that nebudy also entered that room healdes Krivitsky between 7 P. M. on Bunday, the latest that any one admits to have seen him, and 9:30 A. M. when he was found by the maid? And the soros deed four or five hours before i found by the maid. Hay, so should & A. M. The next rooms to his were accurated. The revolver found with Krivitsky was 24 call separating walls are filmsy. How is It that mobody heard the shot?

Police Reaffirm Identification of Krivitsky

Thomas Hits Inquiry, Wants Dies Probers To Investigate Case

Local police, answering a Dies Committee member who was "ase salled with doubts" whether it was really Walter Krivitsky's body which was found here February 10, said last night that positive identification had been established by finger-

Representative Thomas, Republican, of New Jersey, said in Passaic, N. J., that Washington polical had done a poor job of handling the case. Although he had viewed the body and identified it as Krivitsky, he said yesterday, he had since coma to doubt his identification.

Lt. George Darnall, head of the police homicide squad, answered the Representative by pointing out that fingerprints had been taken from the body and had been compared with those made by Krivitaky when he registered last year as an alien.

The fingerprints of the dead man and those of Krivitsky were identical, Lt. Darnall said. The detectives pointed out the body had been identified by several persons who knew the former Russian spy chief intimately.

Body Found in Hotel.

Krivitsky's body was found in the Bellevue Hotel. He had been shot through the head and police listed the case as a suicide, before learning the real identity of the victim. When it was learned that it was Krivitsky, further investigation was made—with police closing the case as a suicide.

Representative Thomas made his charges in a speech before a group at a Passaic Presbyterian church, the Associated Press reported. He said police investigation of the case "probably the worst * * * the Dies Committee ever came in contact with."

He charged police had told committee investigators they were unable to take fingerprints from the gun found in the hotel room because it was covered with blood. He said committee investigators told him the blood should facilitate rather than hinder the taking of prints.

The Representative also said there were several discrepancies in the story of the investigation as told to the committee by the police.

Wants Committee Inquestion He said the committee "should go into the case to the limit" and predicted that "you have not yet heard the last of the Krivitsky case."

In New York, Louis Waldman, who was Krivitsky's attorney, said there was no question about the identification. He said both he and Mrs. Krivitsky had seen the body and were sure of the identification. "I took steps to settle any dispute before it might arise," he said. "I took pictures of the body."

This, he explained, he had done because he anticipated the dispute. On one point, Mr. Waldman said, he agreed with Mr. Thomas:
"I agree that the investigation of

"I agree that the investigation of the case was the sloppiest and most incomplete ever conducted."

incomplete ever conducted."

The case was "closed" here with the issuance of a certificate of suicide by Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald. Asked about Mr. Thomas' statements, Dr. MacDonald yesterday said:

"So far as I know, there are no grounds for reopening the case; Nothing new has been given me."
No New Evidence, Thompson Saya: Chief of Detectives Bernard W. Thompson said police had obtained no new evidence in the case and as far as they are concerned it is closed.

Mr. Thomas, in his speech, said he couldn't "find any evidence that the F. B. I. took any part in the investigation of the death of this international figure."

F. B. I. officials said at the time of the investigation they were taking no part in it. Yesterday E. Tracy, in the office of Director J. Eggar Hoover, repeated that the E. E. "did not and is not going to investigate the case."

He said the F. B. I. did not enter the investigation because the death old not occur on a Government servation.

Wants to Call Hoover

He told the Times-Herald that he will:

- 1. Formally recommend that the Dies Committee take over and reopen the investigation of the case when the committee meets Tuesday.
- 2. Request that the committee issue subpoenas for J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the F.B.I.; Police Superintendent Ernest W Brown and Chief of Detectives Bernard W. Thompson, the latter two in charge of what he termed the "bungled" police investigation of Krivitsky's death, and.
- 3. Recommend public hearings be held to determine why the F.B.I. did not investigate the death of "this international figure, and to delve into the methods used by police in their investigation of the case."

He added that he is now "assailed with doubts" whether the body found was actually that of the former Russian general,

Representative Martin Dies. head of the committee, refused the last of the Krivitsky case, Europe, found shot here February to comment on Representative Thomas, who identified the slain 10. sputtered with congressional Thomas' remarks, but declared the Representative Parnell Thomas the Krivitsky case was definitely not at a close.

AIDE OF DIES DOUBTS VICTIM WAS KRIVITSKY

Rep. J. Parnell Thomas, of New Jersey, a member of the Dies Committee, declared in Passaic yesterday that the committee will continue to investigate the recent death in Washington of Gen. Walter G. Krivitsky, former Russian spy. Thomas said he does not believe Krivitsky committed suicide.

In a talk at a Washington's Birthday luncheon of the Burryman's Club, Thomas criticized police handling of the case.

"As the days have passed," he said, "I have been wonder-ing if it really was Krivitsky. We have not heard the last of this case.

"The Washington police bungled terribly. Though the body was found at 9:30 a. m., no investigation was started until 3:45 p. m. The FBI did not do a complete job either. As things stand now, no one can actually be sure that the body was Krivitsky's."

Ex-Russ Officer Slain In Mystery

Police Hunt For Krivitsky Murder Link

U. S. Army Inspected Bomb Invented by Victim of N. Y. Crime

NEW YORK, Peb. 24 (I.N.S.). New York police today investigated the mysterious slaying of a former white Russian army colonel. Michael A. Borislavsky, 55, whose body was found with a bullet hole through the head last night behind the wall of a convent in uptown New York.

Motive for the killing was not known, although friends of the slain man disclosed he recently had invented a bomb which had been favorably received by the United States War Department, and that he was engaged in respect to a new smoke screen which he planned to submit to Washington.

Weighed 300 Pounds

Although associates insisted the write Russian officer had "no political affiliation," police intensified their investigation because of the strange death of General Walter G. Krivitsky in a Washington hotel room just two weeks ago. Krivitsky, who had been hiding from the Soviet Ogpu, was found with a bullet hole through his head, Shot through the right eye, Colonel Borislavsky, a powerful man, six feet tall, weighing 300 pounds, with the close-cropped haircut of the Russian army officer, was found lying face down against the wall of the convent of the Sacred Heart, near 133d Street, by Dr. Frederick Ziman, a passerby.

norislavsky, a graduate of the mittary academy in Russia but for the past 20 years a naturalized citizen of the United States, recently had received favorable commanications from the War Dipattment on his bomb, according to his wife, Viora, and was hopeful of receiving as much as $500, 006 for his invention.

Held Doctor's Degree

The former colonel, who held a doctor of science degree and also a degree from Columbia University, left his three-room flat at about 5 p.m. yesterday for a "breath of fresh air" his wife, a hospital worker, said.

Three and a half hours later, Dr. Ziman found him slumped along the convent wall, Assistant Medical Examiner Raymond B. Miles, who hurried to the scene after police were summoned, reported the bullet which had killed the tussian had pierced the right glast of his spectacles, entered the eye, and emerged through the back of the head.

The bullet had ripped through the colonel's shabby derby, which lay about three feet from his body. Police were unable to locate either the gun or the bullet.

No Robbery Indicated .

The ex-army officer, who borrowed 30 cents from his wife when he left his apartment, had only 7 cents in the pockets of his brown imitation fur coat, but the coat was buttoned and there was no indication that he had been a robbery victim.

Mrs. Borislavsky said she did not know whether her husband had been carrying any designs for the invention when he left the apart nent. Only some letters written in Russian were found in all pockets.

Stalin Foe's Killing Stirs Hint of Plot

By International News Service

New York, Feb. 24.-Detectives investigating the murder of Col. Michael Borislavsky, White Russian exile and military inventor, who was found shot to death in the rear of a convent in upper Manhattan, today considered the possibilities that international intrigue may have played a hand.

Borislavsky's death followed that of Gen. Walter G. Krivitsky in a Washington hotel room February 10. Both men were enemies of Stalin and the Soviet regime.

Col. Borislavsky's most recent invention, an aerial torpedo, had already been submitted to the United States War Department,

The inventor's body was found sprawled on a sidewalk behind the convent. Police found the bullet which pierced Borislavsky's spectacles and head and rushed it to the laboratory for examination.

Although they disclaimed knowledge of the case, it was reported that the FBI is working with detectives.

Borislavsky was a member of a White Russian organization, the Russian officers military alliance. whose leaders, two of whom were slain in Paris, were targets for the Soviet Secret Police. He was 55. 6 feet tall, weighed 250 pounds and was a graduate of the Russian Mili-tary Academy. He had been a naturalized citizen of this country for 20 years. Col. Feeder Maybohn, the slav scientist's partner, said the aerial torpedo had been accepted by the government and that he and Borislavky also had perfected a "smoke clearing bomb" that would revolutionize aerial photography.

Maybohn said he had returned from Washington Sunday night after being told the Government had ac-; cepted the aerial bomb and was pre-pared to pay between $500,000 and $600,000 for it. He was waiting at Borislavsky's $35 a month apartment when police arrived with news of the murder.

In Washington today the War Department disclaimed any knowledge of Borislavsky's invention However, the National Inventors Council reported he had submitted a design for an "aerial torpedo" on December 1, 1940, which the council had subsequently found "not necessary to national defense."

Police surnilsed that Borislarsky found clutched tightly in his right /00 - ///46 - A

The first impression was that he had been robbed, but his fur-lined ercoat was tightly buttoned. He ind 11 cents and a valuable watch in his pockets.

The former officer in the Czars army left home yesterday shortly after 5 p. m. His body was found lying face downward in a pool of blood three hours later.

His wife, prostrated by shock, said he had received anonymous threats of death three years ago.

"He received an anonymous warning in the mail," she said. "He believed it was because he had fought the Bolsheviks."

Nicholas P. Rybakoff, editor of Rossiya, a Russian language news-paper published in New York, disclosed that his paper had printed several articles by Borislavsky which were strongly critical of the Stalin regime.

"Although Col. Borislavsky was more of a scientist than an active politician, he was well known for his hatred of communism," he said.

It was revealed that the slain scientist's 32-year-old daughter by an earlier marriage is living in an earlier marriage is living in Ge many, the wife of a Nazi sol-die! Borislavsky also seemed to have been intensely interested in Nazi aviation. His home has many pasted-up clippings of parachuse troop activities and Nazi air developments.

In discussing the missing ultinesses, Dies disclosed that Krivitsky, shortly before his dark was riving.

shortly before his death, was trying to establish the identity of several men he was certain were OGPU agents. Furthermore, Dies said, Borislavsky "claimed" to have known the identities of agents.

Dies cited the deaths of Krivitsky and Borislavsky and the assassina-tion of Leon Trotsky in Mexico City last year as "examples." He said they were meant to show the fate of informers against Axis secret police.

"I don't know whether the Krivitsky death was a suicide," Dies said.
"Probably it was, but the important thing to bear in mind is why did Gen. Krivitsky kill himself! I believe he died to save his family and that there is no essential dif-ference, in principle, between his death and the famous Moscow 'show

"Fellows Pattern"

"In any event the Krivitsky death and that of Borislavsky followed a pattern familiar all over Europe. The OGPU, the Gestapo and the OVRA all have the power of life and death over their agents."

Dies said his committee has a rather complete story of the opera-tions of foreign police in this country. All that was needed to pin the story down, he said, were names of agents which, he believes, the missing witnesses would have supplied. Trotsky, before his assassination, was to have given Dies certain in-formation, the chairman stated re-calling that consideration at one time was given to bring Trotsky into this country as a witness.

Despite all the obstacles, Dies said he was certain that the full story of Axis spies in the United States will be disclosed. "It's only a matter of time," he declared.

KRIVITSKY NOTE PINS DEATH ON OGPU, CHARGE

NEW YORK, March 4.—(International News Service.)—Declaring a corrected version of Gen, Walter Krivitsky's "suicide" note to his wife made it "a typical Soviet-inspired confession." Louis Waldman, attorney for the late one-time OGPU spy, made public copies of the original three death notes today.

Krivitsky's body, bullet through the brain, was found in Washington, D. C., hotel room on February 10—shortly after he revealed he was in fear of his life from OGPU agents because of his sensational revelations of Communist activities.

Waldman said the new translation of the note in question—written in Russian—corroborates the belief that Krivitsky was hounded to death by the OGPU and killed himself as part of a "bargain" to save his family.

Officials said "every possible cause" is being studied in inves tigating the accidents, which have involved almost every type of military plane. All data, they said, will be used by laboratory and training experts to work out further safety devices for flying.

Toll Relatively Lower

At the same time, military men repeatedly pointed out that while the compilation of total recent crashes seems high, if considered in the light of the great expansion of Army and Navy air activity, the disasters per flying hour will be relatively lower than heretofore.

The crashes have occurred throughout the country and in Hawaii and Panama. Investigations are conducted by local autherities in the field who forward reports to the War or Navy dipart-

Police Bungled Krivitsky Probe, FBI Convinced

Columnist Quotes Officials' Comment On Handling of Case

Federal Bureau of Investigation officials are convinced Washington police bungled investigation of the mysterious death of Walter Krivitsky, Leon Pearson, Times-Herald columnist. declared in a radio broadcast last night.

Pearson, who spoke over station WOL, said the FBI and the local police department have been at ochs since 1929, when the two police units clashed over investigation of the McPherson case.

First evidence of police "botching" of the Krivitsky case came in the hotel room itself, Pearson quoted the FBI official as saying. He referred to a hotel maid who cleaned up Krivitsky's room before police arrived at the scene.

"Any efficient police force would have a standing agreement with all hotels, that whenever an incident of this kind occurs, the scene should be left untouched," the FBI officer declared, according to Pear-

Pearson said he asked the FBI official if he believed Krivitsky had been murdered.

Krivitsky Slain, Says Chambers

Hotel Death Here Was Ruled Suicide

WESTMINSTER, Md., Dec. 20 (INS) - Whittaker Chambers declared today that Gen. Walter Krivitsky, Communist underground leader, was murdered in Washington in 19/1 because he had broken with the Soviet Union.

Chambers, in an interview at his Maryland farm, disclosed that for more than a year he sheltered Krivitsky's widow, Tonia, and her son, Alek, because they feared they had been marked for Red vengeance.

Krivitsky perished of a bullet wound in a Washington hotel room. Police officially labeled the case suicide. But Chambers insisted that Krivitsky was slain by Communist agents.

Tells of Paris Attempt

Chambers, central figure in the current Communist espionage case which has resulted in indictment of Alger Hiss, former State department official, told the Baltimore News-Post:

"Krivitsky was my friend. I am certain that he was killed by agents of the Red underground. Befrire he was murdered in Washingion there had been an attempt to assassinate him Paris."

Chambers, former senior editor of Time magazine, said Krittiky s an "old Bolshevik" who look part in the 1917 revolution and became an officer in the Red army in 1920. Later, Chambers went on, Krivitsky was named head of the Communist underground in western Europe.

Second Red Murder Disclosed

Unfolding the Krivitsky story further, Chambers declared:

"Krivitsky's second in command was a man named Ignatz Reiss. who became distillusioned and decided to break with Moscow. Reiss showed Krivitsky a personal letter he sent to Stalin, which began:

" To the murderer of the Kremlin's cellars—I am returning my decorations and resuming my liberty of action . . .'

"A short time after Reiss sent the letter to Stalin, Reiss was murdered.

Fled to America

Chambers Hid Family Of Krivitsky

Whittaker Chambers, top witness in the current Communist spy investigation, declared yesterday he had hidden the widow and son of former Red Army Gen. Walter G, Krivitzky on his Maryland farm for more than a year.

General Krivitzky, former Red apy who turned Stalin-hater and came to this country was found that to death in the Bellevue Hotel bere on the morning of February 16, 1941.

While his death was officially listed as a suicide by Washington police and Coroner A. Magnuter MacDonald, Chambers said vesterday he was "convinced" that Kristle had been "murdered by Communist agents." There had been a previous attempt on his life, Chambers said.

Wzote About Red Spies

Krivitzky had written magazine articles on Russian espionage and had told the (Dies) Committee on Un-American Activities of Statin agents in the United States Army and Navy.

Chambers' statements were made in an interview with the Baltimore News-Post, published yesterday. The interview was at his farm, near Westminster, Md., where microfilm evidence of stolen Government documents, hidden in a pumpkin, was recently given by Chambers to investigators of the Un-American Activities Committee.

Chambers said his family and the Krivitskys had become quite iriendly because both he and Krivitsky, who had enanged his name from Samuol Ginsburg in 1919, bad boken with the Communists.

"Fearing that Mrs. Krivitsky and "Fearing that Mrs. Krivitsky and her son also had been marked for death by the Red underground in merica," he told the News-Post, I, took them in. Her entire family had been wiped out by the Reds in Europe, and the meeded someone to help her."

Les_Affer a Year

After they spent more than a year on a farm he previously ewned and on his present one, without any attempt against them, they left, Chambers added, but would not say where they are living now.

Chambers described Krivitsky as an "old Bolshevik" who joined in the 1917 revolution, became an Army officer in 1920, and later was named head of the Communist anderground in western Europe.

After he broke with the Communists, Krivitsky fied to Holland, and decided to come to this country. In Paris, while waiting on a station platform for a boat train to Le Havre, he was fired on by NEVD agents under the eyes of French police. Chambers said Kfivitaky told him.

Finally Judged a Suicide

During the police investigation into the Krivitsky shooting, Coroner MacDonald first issued a suicide certificate, then recalled it after acquaintances of Krivitsky said they believed he was assaultated by Russian secret police.

A note to his wife. Tonis and his son, Alek then y said. "I want to live very hadly, but it is impossible."

On October 12, Inspector Bennard W. Thompson, chief of detectives, announced, "Now, as before, we are convinced that Krivitsky killed himself," and the case was closed.

25 Years Ago, a Soviet Master Spy Was Shot He—Some Called It Suicide, Others Cried Murder

By Flora Lewis
Washington Post Staff Writen,
MAID found the body

MAID found the body at 9:30 Monday morning, Feb. 10, 1941, when she went in to clean up the room. She opened the door with a passkey that hung in the hall linen closet and saw the man's feet and legs on the bed, lying the wrong way round with the feet toward the head of the bed. He was wearing trousers and socks, so she went on in to ask what time she could some back without disturbing him. He didn't answer.

When the police sergeant came about half an hour later, the maid, Thelma Virginia Jackson, 21, told him: "So I walked on over to the bed and looked and I saw he had blood all over his head... Then I saw he wasn't breathing."

It was a modest description. A 130grain mushroom bullet, the kind with a scooped head to make a larger wound, had been fired from a .38 automatic at close range. It had torn through the man's brains from the right temple to below the reft ear, leaving a hele the size of a substantial potato. The bullet was lost somewhere in the hotel room wall. The dead man was slight, gray, unprepossessing, fully dressed apart from shoes and jacket. There was nothing about him or the room that looked important: a brown canvas satchel, a photograph of a boy, three notes written respectively in English, German and Russian. The gun, covered thickly with drying blood, lay on the floor.

A Genteel Setting

A OBVIOUS CASE of price, Det.

A DEUT LIGHT COMPLETED AND INC.

The made the routine possession and identity checks, sent for the morgue wagon

The death of a guest is always an embarrassment for a hotel, and it was all the more jarring in the genteel but modest atmosphere of the Hotel Bellevue, 15 E at. nw.

The dead man was not known at the Bellevue. He had come in only the afternoon before and had done or said nothing remarkable except to die. It seemed such a typical translent tragedy that the police were not even intrigued by the discovery that he had registered under the name of Walter Poref but carried in his pocket a formal affidavit identifying him as Samuel Ginsberg, born in Russia in 1899.

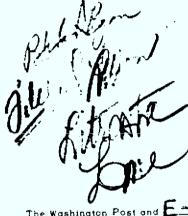

The note in English was in an envelope addressed to Louis Waldman, 205 Broadway, New York. Accustomed to misleading botel registrations and probably thinking little of it, Washington police wired New York police asking them to inform Waldman of the death of Samuel Ginsberg and to request instructions for disposal of the body.

A Hunted Spy

ALDMAN RECEIVED the police call that afternoon. That broke it.

He immediately identified Ginsberg as Walter Krivitsky, formerly whitef of Soviet military intelligence in Western Europe, a master spy who had known many secrets, turned against Stalin and spilled a few, been marked and hunted since by Soviet agents.

More than once Krivitsky had said to Waldman, who was his lawyer, "If ever I am found dead and it looks like an accident or suicide, don't believe it. They are after me. They have tried before." Waldman knew that the dead man had said the same thing to several

NOT RTICEBEP3 1966

Tel)/

An obvious case of murder, the lawyer concluded. He flew to Washington and demanded an FBI investigation. It was refused. He asked for the homicide division's file. It was refused. He went to the Bellevue to look at room 532, a simple room furnished with narrow twin beds, dresser, desk, chair and a reproduction of a forest scene. The police said the door had been locked from the inside. The maid had not said whether she tested the door or not, only that she had stuck her passkey in the hole and opened it.

The window, overlooking what was then a jumble of shacks and is now a parking lot, was open a few inches. But it was the fifth floor and there was no ledge or fire escape by which anyone could enter the room through the window.

The lock on the door was not automatic. Even with the latch shut, it opened easily to a passkey and was the coude type that probably would have opened to almost anything, including a sturdy toothpick.

Neighbors Both Sides

THE SUITE to the left of Krivitsky's room and the room to the right had been occupied. The walls and doors are not thick. Sometimes hotel residents complained of hearing every telephone conversation, every snore and snort of their neighbors.

There was no silencer on the gun found beside the body. Yet no one in the hotel said he had heard a shot between the time Krivitsky arrived, at 5:49 p. m. Sunday, according to the register, and the time his body was found Monday morning. The police surgeon placed the probable time of death at about 4 a.m., a quiet hour when there are few other sounds to muffle a shot.

No one knew of any calls or visitors for the man in 532, though the hotel is big enough for people to come and go at normal hours without attracting notice. From the time he entered his room until he was carried away to the morgue, the only evident activity of the man in 532 as far as the hotel staff knew had been to order a bottle of club soda.

A bellboy took it to him, went downstairs with the dollar bill offered in payment and went back up with the change. That was between 6:30 and 7 Sunday evening.

Randolph Thompson, 29, the bellboy, told police when asked if the man appeared despondent, 'He appeared to me to be just like all foreign people, quiet and solemn." John Vence Wilson, 30, the elevator operator, said to the same question, "He seemed to be just like anyone else would be."

There was no sign of a scuffle in the room and nothing appeared to have been removed or disordered.

A Trotsky Parallel

IN ADDITION to Waldman, most of Krivitsky's friends and a number of other people who knew of him but had not met him made immediate public statements of their conviction that he had been murdered by the Soviet secret police.

Mrs. Leon Trotsky, widow of the revolutionary leader who had been murdered in Mexico the summer before, declared: "Krivitsky's death was not a suicide. That suicide theory is just one of the OGPU's many schemes to attempt to cover up its murders. Stalinists, for example, tried to make the first unsuccessful attempt on Trotsky appear as self-assault."

Alexander Kerensky, head of the short-lived Russian government that overthrew the Czar and fell to the Bolsheviks, said in New York: "I am sure it was murder... If it was not a murder, then it was a suicide provoked by a direct menace. I understand that they had been menacing his son, whom he loved dearly."

Krivitsky's widow had no doubt that her husband had been killed. Suzanne LaFollette, a close friend to whom the note in German was addressed, said that Krivitsky had previously been approached by three OGPU agents. "One of them told him to stay out of the midtown area of New York if he didn't want to get into trouble. The man said, 'We work in threes and we've been on the lookout for you constantly."

A Newspaper Flurry

ALL THIS was prominently published in Washington, New York and other major newspapers for a day or two after his death. For about ten days more, Hearst papers and various columnists who regularly called attention to Communist activities gave spectacular reviews of Krivitsky's dramatic story and echoed the demand for an official investigation of his death. Several newspapers and columnists sympathetic to the left counterattacked with fierce mockery at the suggestion that Stalin's arm reached to a Washington hotel room.

But nobody did anything; there wasn't much to be done. Krivitsky was found dead on Feb. 10, 1941. On June Sensitive, keen ed, alert, he grew into a sligl wiry child, independent, passic eager to throw his meager against the oppressiveness of the he saw.

Later he wrote: "At the age I had entered the working-class ment. It was a half-mature, hal ish act. I heard the plaintive mofens suffering race mingled songs of freedom.

But in 1917, I was a youngster of 18, and the Bolshevik Revolution came to me as an absolute solution of all problems of poverty, inequality, injustice. I joined the Bolshevik Party with my whole soul. I seized the Marxist and Leninist faith as a weapon with which to assault all the wrongs against which I had instinctively rebelled."

Behind-Lines Saboteur

IT WAS NOT an idle metaphor. Like many of his comrades, Ginsberg took a revolutionary name - Walter Krivitsky-and became a serious fighter, tough, guileful, uninhibited by any other ties in devotion to his cause. He was worth more than the gun he carried.

In the Russian civil war that followed the revolution, he was sent behind the White army's lines in the Ukraine to organize sabotage, intelligence, resistance at the enemy's rear. He so distinguished himself at these guerrilla tasks, which he called "missions of a revolutionary-military character," that at the conclusion of the war he was sent to the Red army's general staff courses and assigned to military intelligence.

It was still the proletarian style army of Trotsky's creation, without formal rank, and Krivitsky's position of Kombrig (commander of a brigade) did not entitle him to be addressed as general, though it was the equivalent of brigadier. Later he was made Komdiv (commander of a division), the equivalent of major general.

But his assignments were always "revolutionary military," with emphasis on the former, though in a hard-nosed, practical way without much windy oratory or feverish agitation. Even when propaganda was part of his job, he was the organizer, the arranger of deals and coups, not the spouter.

His first experience as an export technician in revolution came in Germany in 1923. Lenin thought the Bolsheviks could not survive without another major industrial country as partner, and he thought that Germans, despoiled by inflation and fuming with anger at French occupation of the Rhineland were ripe for revolt.

It was a devastating miscalculation for the German Communists, who were crushed. But the ardent Krivitsky determined to save something from the wreckage. Out of the organization built to make a German revolution, he created an extensive network of reliable agents.

Despite many later disasters, the roots were firm enough to provide toplevel intelligence from the German high command throughout World War II. So prompt and efficient was the system that there were times when Soviet commanders at the front must have received almost simultaneously the disposition and attack orders sent from Berlin to the Nazl commanders facing them.

Revolutionary Romance

FINHROUGHOUT THE twenties, Kri-L vitsky moved surreptitiously from Moscow to France, Holland, Switzerland, Italy and Austria. He had not gone unnoticed when he tried to organize a Red German army, however, and in 1926 he had to hide out from the Berlin police in the Soviet Embassy for two months. After that, he dealt with the German network mostly from the periphery.

In Vienna at one point, he met another Soviet revolutionist, a striking blond named Antonina Porfirjeva. She was from Leningrad (St. Petersburg when she was born there Feb. 18, 1902) and as different from Krivitsky as the sparkling Russian north from the heavy-scented, swarthy south.

He was the intense, electric-minded intellectual. She was the broadcheeked, sentimental Slav, to him the sturdy, all-embracing soul of Mother Russia. They shared their devotion to the Soviet cause and it was not necessary to sort out whether ideology counted a little more for one and proud patriotism for the other, since the two urges fused for both in glowing satisfaction.

In 1926, they married in Moscow. The marriage register gave his name as Walter Krivitsky. The Ginsberg past was far behind him. The reality was the revolutionary.

Necessity made it an intricate and shifting reality. They lived in many places under many names, carried many different colored passports.

Once, Krivitsky told a friend much later, he was traveling north from Rome on an Italian train. He was engaged in obtaining for Russia the blueprints of a new Italian submarine. The task took over a year and many trips, but was successful in the end.

Extractors of the highest secrets must be highly secretive. An old acquaintance happened to see Krivitsky on the train and greeted him for what he was, a good and long-standing friend. "I just stared blankly at him," Krivitsky said, "as though I didn't even speak his language."

He had learned to perfection all the arts of espionage, including the suppression of instinctive little human reactions and total attention to detail, which are the hardest. Such well-tempered armor is bound to steel the man inside, as well.

Early Anti-Stalinist

THAT HARDNESS helped as Kriv sky unavoidably noticed the w reality was shifting inside the Sov Union. He wrote later with cold ! savage contempt of the way Sta maneuvered the Red Army into s porting the vicious collectivizat drive of the thirties and the inipurges of Old Bolsheviks.

Krivitsky always knew what going on partly because of his p tion and partly because of his mine taut precision instrument that c spring to understanding of the devious manipulations at a nudge f the simplest, most trivial-seeming f

"The item," Waldman contin "was a dull little bit about the us old films from the 1919-20 Russo-Po war in the new training course for Red Army. Krivitsky said it m that secret preparations had sta for a Soviet move on Poland and Red Army soldiers were being i iously accustomed to consider I as the obvious enemy. It seemed solutely preposterous at the time.'

A Distressing Order

FROM WHAT he said afterv Krivitsky's soul no doubt squir with disappointment and distast many things he saw and foresay Russia all through the bewilde thirties. But he believed in his o and he was trained to serve it will question.

It distressed him when, in Decer 1936, a time when Hitler was dun Communists in concentration c and Moscow was publicly scouring world for allies against German be told that his espionage network Germany must be leashed. Mo and Berlin were on the verge of agreement, he was told, and no must be done to upset Hitlety he obeyed.

It was in September, 1935, that Krivitsky established himself as chief of Soviet military intelligence in Western Europe. He had offices in Paris, agents everywhere, and made his headquarters comfortably in The Hague, where he posed as an Austrian dealer in rare books. His wife Tonya and small son Alek, born not long before, accompanied him there. Outwardly, he led the roving but placid existence of a collector of handsome, interesting, harmless old volumes. In fact, it was a life with sudden bursts of frenetic activity, breathless dashes from city to city, excruciating periods of enforced waiting, and always nagging worries.

A Literal Cover

SOON AFTER he settled in The Hague, Krivitsky got his first lead on what was to become a major espionage coup and old books became not only the cover for a spy but themselves a repository of secrets.

Germany and Japan, he learned, were secretly negotiating an agreement that would mean war in the Pacific as well as in Europe when the moment came. It was of vital importance to the Soviet Union, not only because of the military meaning of possible war on two fronts of its vast territory but also because Stalin himself was secretly seeking an exclusive agreement with Hitler.

Krivitsky's performance was a masterpiece of intrigue. The German-Japanese talks were so secret that not even the German Foreign Office knew they were taking place. It was not possible to penetrate them from the German side. However, the Nazis had succeeded in_breaking—or perhaps stealing—the Japanese diplomatic codes.

Krivitsky managed to buy the codes from the SS, though without of course explaining how Soviet intelligence meant to use them. They were smuggled out of Berlin in a valuable early edition of Francis Bacon, secretly defaced with markings to indicate the coding keys.

Then Krivitsky's agents in Berlin got hold of the full file of the Japanese negotiator's cabled reports to Tokyo on the talks and established a tap on further correspondence. The files were smuggled out on microfilm. With the codes, a first-rate translator of Japanese, microfilm technicians and couriers, Krivitsky worked feverishly in Holland to speed the sinister news to Moscow.

Later, with the pylons for this network well established, he was also able to tell Moscow of the secret Japanese decision not to attack the Soviet Union in the event of a Pacific war. That was information worth many divisions.

Even Used Fascists

with were trusted Communists, but not all. His task was concrete action and he used whatever tools he found.

In the case of the Italian submarine, the key to success was a high-ranking Fascist who loved money even more than he loved Mussolini.

Krivitsky's duty and his interests brought him intimate knowledge of the underside of high politics in Russia and Western Europe, and he had learned to take it as it came. In his mind's eye, he was still an idealist, driven purely by the passion for a better, kinder world. But his mind's hands had grown horny in dealing with harsh facts and his mind's stomach had been inured against revulsion.

He was the complete professional, fully equipped to set off without cavil the dirty means against the distant shining ends. Or so he and his superiors supposed.

But it wasn't always easy. Each trip back to Moscow chewed further at the galvanized protection against doubt. The terror there, as the juggernaut of the purges rolled on, was undeniable. The Revolution had been god. Now, in the mid-thirties, Stalin had come to proclaim himself the Revolution.

Penetrating minds like Krivitsky's trembled, and shrank to find solace in narrower loyalties, more distant horizons. He watched the Old Bolsheviks being cut down with cringing confessions of imaginary treason. It was much harder for him when the plague turned on the Red Army, his home in the Revolution.

A Personal Jolt

A FTERWARD, exposing Soviet collusion with Nazis on the forgeries that provided props for the Red Army purge of 1937, Krivitsky was able to write: "It is one thing to consign to the firing squad batches of politicians, such as Zinoviev or Kamenev. It is another to wipe out the helmsmen of a nation's war machine.

"Would Stalin dare to shoot a figure like Marshal Tukhachevsky or a leader like Gamarnik, Vice Commissar of War (and Krivitsky's admired chief in intelligence), at such a critical international moment? Would he dare to leave the Soviet power defenseless before its enemies by decapitating the Red Army?"

Stalin did. Krivitsky quivered but said nothing. When he went to Moscow in March, 1937, Krivitsky felt after a time that the delay in being sens back to his post was getting ominous. Stoi-f cally, he messaged his wife in T Hague to prepare to return to Moso with their child, though by then army officer could be sure of survivat home.

When, after all, he was dispatch once more to Western Europe, he to his reassignment as bestowal by Sta "of the highest testimonial of loya within his power." There was so pride in that, despite the wayes nauseous misgiving he had begun feel.

For another top Soviet agent, an and close comrade of Krivitsky's, pride was already drowned by owhelming disgust and disillusion natz Reiss, who worked under code name of Ludwig in Western rope and had connections with Am ca, could swallow the ravishments his beliefs no longer. He wrote a let to Stalin, and he wrote to his favori in the network under him, declar his defection.

Krivitsky knew that Reiss was vering. A few hours before an apportune ment with his friend, at which Represumably meant to reveal his dision, a high Soviet police officinisted on seeing Krivitsky in Pathe police, then called the OGPU, gradually moved in on military intigence so that all Soviet agents abreame under OGPU orders.

Spiegelglass, the police official is specially from Moscow, showed Kraky the letter Reiss had just write the had intercepted it before it eleft Paris. The letter ended: "Nicannot continue any longer. I am turning to freedom. Back to Lenin his teachings and his cause." The Krivitsky was cautiously but unmistably asked to help trap his free traitor."

A Silent Caller

TIE DELAYED and evaded, ma ing to warn Reiss to escape. technique of warning that Krivi chose captured precisely the nightn fantasy of the atmosphere an "comrades" in that summer of 193'

He was sitting with Spiegelglass another agent in a restaurant at Paris World Fair. There was gantimeless, pleasure, light-hearted gance around them. From time to after midnight, Spiegelglass wer apparently to confer with other stationed nearby. Each time, Krisneaked to a pay telephone, Reiss and hung up as soon as was an answer. It would have beyond daring to say even one Reiss understood at last and f dawn the next morning. He didn't last long, though. On Sept. 4, 1937, Reiss's body, riddled with machine gun bullets, was found beside a lonely road in Switzerland.

The Swiss police acted quickly and energetically. That assassination was solved: murder by the OGPU after Reiss had been lured to a rendezvous by a woman who had worked under him and had hinted that she was about to join him in defection.

Krivitsky felt sure that he had badly blotted his copybook by refusing to help kill Reiss. After that, he too was under constant surveillance by Soviet agents in Paris.

The Reiss murder carried his mental processes one step further. Even the intimate loyalty to a dear friend was not to be allowed him. He still planned . to return to Moscow, but he had come to understand, as he later wrote, that "the choice before me was between a sure bullet in the Lubianka (the OGPU headquarters and prison in Moscow) from Stalin's formal assassins and a rain of bullets from a machine gun outside Russia from Stalin's informal assassins."

It was at the end of September, dogged at every step, that he made what he called "the momentous decision of my life." His wife asked him his chances for survival if they returned to Moscow. He answered, he wrote later, that there was none.

"But there is no reason you should be punished on account of me," he added. "When you get back, they will make you sign a paper repudiating me and denouncing me as a traitor. As a reward for this, you and our child will be spared. As for me, it's sure death over there. I will not go to certain siauzhioz"

Aided by French

TONYA KRIVITSKY decided to defect with her husband. The escape had to be carefully planned. Krivitsky planned it with the same detailed care he had always given to his work. Paul Wohl, a Central European who had known him before, helped him and secured the protection of the French police and the patronage of the French Socialist Premier, Leon Blum.

The Krivitskys surrendered their false documents to the French Minister of Interior, and in the appeal for asylum, Krivitsky wrote: "I know that a price has been put on my head. The assassins are after me, and they will not spare even my wife or child."

(He knew that Gertrud Schildbach, who had lured Ignatz Reiss to his death, had been ordered to kill Reiss by giving the family a box of choolates filled with strychnine. She was fond of the Reiss child and apparently conid-not bring herself to doubler so the roadside ambuscade was arranged instead. The poisoned chocolates were found in her Lausanne hotel room after she had fled.)

Krivitsky added in his appeal, "I have often risked my life for my cause, but I do not wish to die for nothing . . ."

It was on Oct. 6, 1937, that Krivitsky finally made his break. Twice in the months that followed in France, he was approached by a handsome young Dutchman named Hans Bruesse, whom Krivitsky had recruited for the Soviet service. The first encounter convinced him that Bruesse, who had been an extremely warm friend, had been detailed to lure him to the same fate as that of Reiss.

Krivitsky was wary, he knew the tricks. The French police were vigilant. They guarded him night and day. But the detective inspector assigned to him was unable to catch Bruesse and three colleagues when an actual attempt was made on Krivitsky.

Krivitsky decided that he must go much farther from Moscow in search of a life at peace. Paul Wohl helped him get to the United States. He arrived early in 1938, preceded by a buzz of excitement among the small circle of Russian exiles and journalists who followed Soviet affairs closely and had read the few anti-Stalinist articles which Krivitsky published in European socialist newspapers after his defec-

They knew that he carried treasures of information in his head, even about Soviet secret activities in America, though he had never worked here. Nobody else in the United States had ever heard of Krivitsky, nor paid him any attention now.

Stalin His Scapegoat

HE KNEW the details of many kid-napings and executions carried out by Soviet agents far beyond the borders of the Soviet Union. He also knew the Soviet mentality-perhaps the only one he knew. It allowed, in Stalin's time at least, for no wavering. There could be no such thing as resignation from a task assigned because it caused a crisis of conscience. He who did not obey perfectly, accept everything, was a traitor.

In his own heart, Krivitsky found an answer for himself. He still loved the revolutionary ideals that had become the meaning of his life, but he hated Stalin. It was Stalin, he reasoned, who had betrayed the revolution, not those whom Stalin called traitors.

But Krivitsky knew that his view had the force of a flea against an elephant in the power circumstance of the time. By Moscow's deficition he was a traitor and marked for pu ishment. There was method in Me cow's attitude. Men like Krivits knew too much. And if they got awa their example might encourage othe

Even when he came to the Unit States. Krivitsky knew he could nev really share the comfortable safe that was taken for granted by t crowds he mingled with on the stre It distressed and at the same time p foundly impressed him.

Once, when he recognized a Sovi agent in New York and called t police in fear, he was told that no ing could be done because it impossible to arrest a person in t United States before a crime attempted.

"Imagine," he told his friend & zanne Lafollette. "What a wonder country. People are free unless th actually commit crimes." By that tin in Russia, it was getting to seem th only criminals could go free. Thin were different in the United State much more than Krivitsky at fir realized. In this country, too, it was strange time.

A Time of Schism

TENHE TERRIBLE strains of the pression were over, but in ma ways this was still a divided and l wildered country when Walter Kriv sky arrived in early 1938. Preside Roosevelt was trying, gradually a cautiously, to bring the country to mood of support for the Europe democracies against the wild blath ings of Hitler.

British Prime Minister Nevi Chamberlain was puttering off in 1 small planes of the time for reconcil tion meetings with Hitler.

Krivitaky knew the dirty little trui that made up so much of what v really going on. Sometimes it pressed him; sometimes it made h furiously impatient that America not only did not know, but so oft refused to listen.

An Upstate Refuge

ROM HIS POINT of view, Ame: must have looked full of con dictory quirks. He had a wife and so son, no money, no profession but re lutionist and spy, which were not the "help wanted" lists. A number people were kind to him; a cottage ' found for him in upstate New Y and he spent the summer there, cal ing his breath.

Another refugee couple, Eitel and Marguerite Dobert, fived hearty. Dobert had been a Nazi in his youth, had quit in disgust as Hitler came to power and was as obsessed as Krivitsky with the politics of Europe. The families became close friends. Other friends, mainly Paul Wohl at the beginning, sought to help Krivitsky launch his new life.

His one asset was his knowledge. It seemed self-evident that he should seek to earn his living by writing, and it seemed a satisfying outlet for the warnings he so badly wanted to give a heedless world.

But in a strange country and a strange language, he needed agents and collaborators. Friends introduced him to Isaac Don Levine, a Russian-speaking writer fluent in the special skills of popular journalism, highly knowledgeable in Communist affairs, warm, voluble and above all judicious in marketing exciting articles.

Krivitsky could make a series of hair-raising revelations. Don Levine automatically sought the widest, most rewarding market. The Saturday Evening Post agreed to pay $5000 each for a series of up to eight articles on Levine's word alone of what could be expected. In the end, only five were produced. For a penniless political refugee, it was a fortune.

And it proved to be a serious, finally overwhelming, problem. Don Levine knew his public and how to attract them. The first article, detailing underhanded Soviet machinations in Spain, set the subject and then began: "I happen to be the sole survivor abroad of the group of Soviet officers and officials who had a direct hand in organizing Soviet intervention in Spain, and am the only one who is now free to bare this dramatic chapter of current history . . . I was on the inside . . . I held in my hands the main keys to Stalin's foreign policy . . ."

It was effective, but it wasn't Krivitsky's tone of voice or cast of mind. He would have preferred sedate, analytical articles on the Foreign Affairs Quarterly model or, even better, in the heavy, guttural tones of the European socialist journals. But Levine knew that the Saturday Evening Post wasn't paying $5000 a piece to bore its readers.

Between Two Desires

EVINE DRAMATIZED and sharpened and personalized. Krivitsky squabbled and complained bitterly. Levine wanted details, aames, precise senections. Krivitsky held back, ducked, bickered, torn between the satisfaction. of revealing Stalin's monstrous conspiracies and lies and the desire still to protect old comrades, old ideals, old devotions

He still loved Russia. Sometimes, he told a friend, he would go down to the New York docks just to stare for hours at the Russian ships in the harbor. The nostalgia was not only for a country; it was also for a faith. Not communism but Stalinism was what he wanted to condemn.

Neither Stalin nor America conceived that there might be a difference. Both sides insisted that a man could only be totally for or totally against both. It angered Krivitsky that his disclosures were indeed made to serve those he had always considered enemies of the revolution, but it was not possible to trace a subtle nath

What he had to tell the American public was truly sensational. He told of large-scale Communist counterfeiting of American money to finance propaganda in this country, Communist forgeries and fakeries to set the Moscow show trials, Communist terror and murder and conspiracy. Most startling of all, he told in 1938 that Stalin had ordered Communist collusion with Nazis on several occasions and had been seeking an agreement with Hitler steadily since 1934.

Only the most active, almost professional anti-Communists were able to believe that. It was a devastating charge, too distressing for the credulity even of those who had no sympathy at all for communism but were determined to awaken this country to the evil of Nazism.

The existence of two, ostensibly opposed, wicked leaders in the world seemed too much to swallow. If Hitter were bad, Stalin, whom he attacked, must be good. If Stalin were bad, how could people be aroused against Hitler?

That was the reasoning of many honest people, or rather it was the emotional urge that suppressed clear reasoning. It led not only to a tolerance of Communist sympathies in the government and intellectual society, but to an irritated intolerance of those who denigrated communism.

A Commie Target

A LL THROUGH the thirties, the despair of the depression and the doubts it nurtured about the competence of the democratic system in modern society had tightened the lines on both Sides of the ideological time ofwar in America. There was no climate for objective assessment of facts. Fe each side, there was an identifiable set of bad guys and all the others wer accepted as more or less good, regardless of actual behavior.

The dominant voices of Washingto had correctly identified the wickednes of Nazism and did not want to blur the danger signal with undertones. The effect tended to separate anti-Naziand anti-Communists and make each more strident in their efforts to register the more impressively.

American Communists organized diberately to promote this effect. The scornfully attacked even those with made moderate criticisms of communism, Russia and Stalin, Krivitsky, whenew names and dates and places with exactitude, was a serious setback at therefore a major target.

It was all the worse for them the his revelations were trumpeted across the country by the Saturday Evening Post at its most sensational, rather than in some dusty polemical pamphism which might save satisfied Krivitsk An answer was inescapable.

At first, the Daily Worker and the New Masses insisted that Krivits simply did not exist. He was, the argued, an invention of the extremight devilishly concocted to sprelies about the left. But he did exist. If gave newspaper interviews, had in picture taken.

Then the Communist papers a nounced that he had invented himse that he was really only Schmel Ginsberg, "a well-known habitue Paris cafes" but never a Soviet age let alone an intelligence chief. T $25,000 from the Saturday Eveni Post was made to sound a proof venality. The arguments did not en Krivitsky from the scene, but they succeed in giving him a highly distant ful, suspect aura.

In the public print, he lost real as a man and became a windy conversy. Somehow, he couldn't make facts weigh, only the fury that a rounded them. It was an ironic condiction of the sharp-edged, hard-miled man he was.

Friendships Sour

OTHER EXILES who might he shared his attitudes quarre with him, partly no doubt out of e for the money and attention he won in a country that ignored the own particular abilities. He was not be friend, convinced by his own cess that he knew best how to seem his afters and cynically mistrus from terrible experience.

Eventually, Krivitsky broke with both Paul Wohl and Isaac Don Lewing, his early collaborators. His intense brilliance was fascinating but it was not set in amiability; his agile mind could not absorb the public and private briefings without reaction.

Krivitsky could find no way to cope with the transformation of his public personality produced by the American style of political in-fighting. His defenders sounded as wild and woolly as his attackers. Congressmen were persuaded to denounce him and inquire why he had been allowed to enter the United States. With such prodding, the Immigration Service prepared to deport him.

Krivitsky went to Louis Waldman, twice Socialist candidate for governor of New York and famed as a labor lawyer, a persistent, frisky terrier of a counselor. Whether or not an explicit deal was made, the deportation order was dropped and Krivitsky agreed to testify before Rep. Martin Dies' House Committee on Un-American Activities.

He wasn't eager to do it, it only increased his problem of getting a sober hearing for his facts. But it answered his urgent need to assure a place for his family and himself in the United States.

The testimony, read now, is startling in its empty insignificance. Krivitsky must have felt as Einstein would have if he had been solemnly asked to put on public record the sum of 2 and 2. He knew so much of subtle ploys and plots; all the Congressmen kept asking him, during a day of testimony, was to confirm that the Kremlin ran the Comintern and Stalin ran the Kremlin.

At the time, of course, many Americans refused to believe that the Communist Party of the United States actually listened to Moscow's commands; that the Comintern was not merely a loose confederation of likeminded but quite independent political parties in various countries which happened to include the world's only Communist state. Krivitsky simply said that these things, as obvious and elementary to him as his own face in the mirror, were true, and he volunteered nothing.

There was something more he wanted, however, than just the right to stay in the country. He wanted protection. Once in New York, he ran across a Soylet agent he had known named Sergei Basoff, a husky red-headed former sailor from the Crimea. It was in a cafeteria on 42d Street, something of a rendezvous for CGPU men in the United States, as it turned out.

Basoff was with several others who followed cominously. Krivitsky was scared. He knew of Soviet kidnapings in Paris, of the Reiss murder, of the American woman Julia Stuart Poyntz who vanished outside her New York hotel one day and of the way a drugged man could be amuggled aboard a Soviet ship and disappear forever.

With cunning, Krivitsky maneuvered Basoff into following him to the New York Times building nearby. There he had a friend who summoned half a dozen other friends. For a time, Krivitsky talked there with Basoff, who revealed that Antonina Krivitsky's brothers, both engineers and Communists, had been executed along with the rest of her family in Leningrad because they were related to defectors.

When Basoff left, his unidentified companions kept guard at the entrance to the New York Times. It took a whole conspiratorial arrangement carried out many hours later to spirit Krivitsky away to a friend's apartment. There he spent most of the night, waiting until he could be sure that there was no one to observe him going to Riverside Drive, where he lived under a false name.

There were other encounters. Sometimes Krivitsky called the police; they could do nothing for him. It had been better in France, where his sponsor Leon Blum had made sure he was protected. He knew he needed some official backing.

Dovetailed With Chambers

MEANWHILE, his prediction of a Nazi-Soviet pact came stunningly true, and a few days later, Europe was at war. Both his lawyer Louis Waldman and his collaborator Isaac Don Levine realized that Krivitsky could help the cause of the West and so help himself by establishing a claim for concern about his safety. They went about arranging contacts for him separately.

Levine introduced Krivitsky to Whittaker Chambers, a former Soviet agent in the United States who had quit and gone to work for Time magazine but had not spoken publicly of his underground existence. It was an exciting meeting.

The two men sat in Levine's apartment exchanging experiences, discovering as they went along that again and again one had the missing pieces to the other's jigsaw puzzle. They found, comparing dates and places and descriptions and plots, that they knew a number of the same agents though often by different names.

Long after midnight, Levine went to bed and left them talking. When he woke the next morning, not early, the were still at it. Much that had seen mysterious looked clearer.

That led to another meeting, is famous, and lighted a fuse that extually exploded into the McCarperiod. It fits later in the story. But first Krivitsky-Chambers session an important element in what deoped because Levine saw that the men, who had worked for Mosquite independently of each ot confirmed key parts of each oth knowledge.

He told Krivitsky would do everything possible to him immigration papers and Amer protection, but on condition that vitsky agreed to do all he could for United States.

A session was arranged at the S Department. Ruth Shipley, a willed woman whom Roosevelt once publicly called an ogre, her the Passport Division and kept the many albums of passport photographitted by people whose activity or identities she thought questional Krivitsky was told to go through album and point out any pictures he recognized. There were a number people he had known as Soviet agand he gave details of when and whe'd met them. He didn't even through one book that day. When session was over, Waldman went wately to State to check on the formance.

"They told me he was candid correct," Waldman said much I "The information jibed with what Department knew." But the se hadn't begun to plumb the crodepths of Krivitsky's knowledge second meeting was arranged f week or two later. After that Waldman checked again and was that Krivitsky had done poorly, cl withholding and disguising infotion.

"I went back to the hotel and a Krivitsky why he'd changed, warned him that if he didn't coopfully, I'd have nothing more to do him. He was angry.

"He said that there was no use ing the American Government thing in confidence because it we sloppy about security and so he combed with agents that every he'd said the first time had not be mostly within 48 hours. I asked how he knew. He wouldn't tell, but whatever he'd learned had certainly convinced him," Waldman said.

Despite his desire not to hurt friends on the other side whom he still considered innocent and his contempt for American security, Krivitsky was fully cooperative in at least one circumstance that he thought vital. While they were working together, he told lease Don Legine and Waldman of one and perhaps two Soviet agents in key positions in Britain.

An appointment was made with Loy Henderson, an Assistant Secretary of State. Henderson passed Krivitsky on to the British Embassy. The Marquis of Lothian was Ambassador.

As Don Levine had feared, the first meeting went badly. The elegant British diplomat was not impressed with the unpolished little Russian. Henderson intervened to suggest with great politeness that Krivitsky might be worth listening to. In the meantime, the embassy had made a routine check with London and discovered to its surprise that Krivitsky was right on enough points to be taken seriously.

There was, he said, a leak in the Cabinet Defense Committee, the most secret group at the summit of Britain's war effort. Since the Hitler-Stalin deal was in effect, there was a danger that Moscow would promptly forward to Berlin the secrets flowing daily out of London. Had it gone on, it could have cost Britain the war in the terrible year when she was fighting Germany alone.

The British asked Krivitsky to come to London. He was leery. He told Waldman he didn't trust the Neville Chamberlain government not to make a doct with Stalin if the time came, and then to throw him in as lagniappe.

The political way his mind worked led him to seek political protection in Britain before he ventured there. It was arranged by Waldman with the late Herbert Morrison, then a prominent figure in the British Labor Party.

A Canadian Detour

THE UNITED STATES, not then at war, was uneasy about Krivitsky's being sent on the mission directly from American soil. A second arrangement was made whereby Krivitsky would spend some time in Canada and obtain there a regular immigration visa for his later return to the United States.

Boris Shub, a young Russian-speaking American, went along to use the time reworking the Saturday Evening Post articles into a book, "In Stalin's Secret Service," which was aublished by Harper in 1930. The Royal Cana-disa Mounted Police provided the screening that Krivitsky len ascessary for his safety.

The British meaked him from Canada to England on a warship. As a result of his help in London, the British arrested a man named Charles King, a code clerk with access to the most crucial documents. The wartime trial and conviction were only announced several years later.

Krivitsky also described another agent in the British Foreign Office, a dashing Scotsman given to smoking a pipe and sometimes wearing a same. The clues were insufficient. What details Krivitsky had given seemed to fall into place years after the war, however, when Donald MacLean defected to Moscow with his Foreign Office friend Guy Burgess and a still uncertain number of valuable British and American secrets.

Krivitsky proved to be a productive defector in England, and he was adequately guarded there. He was asked to stay, but he had his heart set on settling down in the United States. In America, though, there is no indication that he ever did give much.

One night spent walking the Long Island seashore and pouring out tales to David Shub, father of his collaborator Boris, Krivitsky went on at length about the dangers to which he was exposed. Shub tried to soothe him, saying, "But why should you still be afraid? Why should Stalin be after you now? After all, you've already told everything and nothing further, can make a difference."

"Oh, no," Krivitsky said. "I haven't told the most important."

Officially Unplumbed

A PART FROM his rejuctance to tell, he was not officially asked. The Dies Committee only sought a kindergarten description of the international Communist hierarchy. The FBI didn't bother with Krivitsky. It had only begun to be interested in subversives and was still concentrating on recketeers and gunmen like Al Capone and Dillinger. To the extent that it made even a passing effort at counterintelligence, it was Nazi agents that the FBI was after.

There was no CIA or anything of the sort. Army and Navy Intelligence went after strictly military matters of direct interest to each service, not cooperating and sometimes competing. The State Department accepted information brought to it, but had no investigative branch. It is hard to resist the speculation that the sensitivity still surrounding the Government's secret Krivitaly files is much less because of what they contain than because they contain so little that mattered.

The whole approach to security and intelligence at that time was "primitive," in the word of former Secretary of State Dean Acheson. In view of the general state of affairs, the casual treatment given Krivitsky was not acquired;

The situation in the State Department was not improved by personal feuds already developing into political vendettas. Adolf Berle was then the State Department officer in charge of liaison with military intelligence. He had been a child prodigy, and as a teen-ager at Harvard Law School he had offended Felix Frankfurter, then a leading professor.

The mutual distaste lasted and spread, even more virulently, to Dean Acheson, who was a devoted admirer of Frankfurter's. People took sides in the State Department and the guarrel reached into the White House.

Berie's assignment carried with it a hostile sensitivity to Soviet behavior, a traditional attitude among old hands in State. Acheson's assignment, involved in supporting Britain against Germany and later, on President Roosevelt's orders, in helping Russia buy supplies in this country, tugged him the other way.

Even during the Nazi-Soviet pact, a number of people in State believed that eventually Stalin would have to fight strength. The atmosphere was abrasive. Hitler and that it was therefore important to help the Russians build up There were sharp quarrels over daily decisions and a certain amount of intrigue in the attempt to influence them

President Roosevelt's statement on the Soviet Union's digestion of Latvia, Lithuania and Estonia after the Hitler-Stalin partitition of Poland. Fast footwork by Loy Henderson, James Dunn and then Under Secretary Sumner Welles got an official denunciation out of the White House before others in State could water it down. But it was followed by an internal tug-of-war over whether the Baltic States' assets in the United States should be handed over to the Russians as Moscow was demanding.

Nobody succeeded in establishing an orderly system of policy priorities that sustained the basic aim of opposing Hiller and still left room for what seemed conflicting decisions on the merits of immediate questions. It wasn't to much that Kriviteley was frozen out of the picture; he just never got in.

The situation he confronted was demonstrated even more clearly when, in 1941, Isaac Don Levine arranged a meeting between Whittaker Chambers and Adolf Berle. Chambers, reinforced by the details he had learned from Krivitsky, recited a story of spy rings within the United States Government and provided a series of names. One of them was Alger Hiss.

There were other respected officials. It was an explosive charge with much substantiating circumstance. Berle took at to the White House. Nobody paid any attention. There was no investigation. The incident was forgotten until it was brought out in the postwar cross-fire of charges and countercharges that led to the Hiss trial.

In the McCarthy period that followed, deliberate suppression was charged. But the atmosphere at the time of the Chambers-Berle meeting makes it more likely that the Berle memorandum was simply brushed off as a part of the continuing game of push and pull in the State Department, not to be taken seriously. The Acheson side automatically supposed that there would be something fishy in anything that came from Berle, and vice versa.

The Other Extreme

THE HAPHAZARD concern for accurity, the personal animosities, the emotional frenzy stirred for Russia once the U.S.S.R. and the United States became allies in war—this immoderate background was doubtless an important factor in swinging the pendulum wildly to the other extreme when World War II had ended and the cold war was at its height. Looking back, the McCarthyites decided that there must have been conspiracies because so much carelessness seemed incredible in the new postwar awareness of intelligence operations.

There had been espionage and Communist penetration of the Government without doubt. Those germs of substance were multiplied into a national fever because they were so difficult to trace in the general mush of the period that had harbored them. According to their temperament, people concluded either that the whole culture was tainted or that it had always been pure.

Emotion gave credibility on a basis of very few facts in the McCarthy period, just as it had denied credibility on a basis of very many facts in the period of Stalin's purges. Krivitsky happened to speak at the wrong time to be heard in earnest. He even died at the wrong time to be buried in Ru early 1941, he was back in the United States and out of steam. He had quarreled with his collaborators and exhausted the fraction of revelations he was prepared to make. Still reading the papers and watching European developments closely, he hoped to put his penetrating mind and burden of experience to use as a foreign affairs analyst. Columns are not so easily come by. He began to cast about for a new start in life.

Dobert had established themselves on a farm near Charlottesville. They had only a few hundred dollars to begin. It was a pioneering struggle, but they were making a life, and they were at peace.

There were prospects, too. Dobert had become a lecturer at the nearby University of Virginia. Krivitsky was attracted by the idea. He began to talk about moving with his wife and child to join the Doberts, and work the farm in partnership.

Two Open Attempts

THERE WAS SOME urgency in considering the move. Twice since he had been in the United States, there had been what he considered open OGPU attempts to surround and then, no doubt, to kill him. On other occasions, he had grounds for suspicion.

Once he had called Loy Henderson at the State Department to say that he was in danger, and was told to get in touch with the New York police. The police were, in effect, willing enough to hold a nervous foreigner's hand if he dropped into a precinct station, but they were neither able nor willing to give regular protection.

Then in early 1941, Krivitsky received a massage that set him shiver-

Ing with fright. He took it to his lawyer, Louis Waldman, on Jam 8: 10 was addressed to his friend Suzanne Lafollette, who had handed it on. The message read:

"Will you please inform your honorable friend K. that an ominous person is in New York: Hans... K('s) devious practices hardly justify this warning. I hesitate to send it. It may be better to let the rats devour each other."

The note was from Paul Wohl, bitter over his quarrel with Krivitsky, which had been primarily about money, but still aware of his former friend's dan-

The reference to Hans meant Hans Bruesse, the Dutchman who had once worked for Krivitsky and twice before had tried to kill him. Wohl had seen Bruesse boarding a bus on a Manhattan street. There was no question of identify, he was sure. He had known the Dutchman well in the days who Bruesse was a favorite at Rybbes, headquarters in The Hague.

Krivitsky was just as sure, when I received the warning, that Bruesse sudden and no doubt illegal appea ance in the United States was to fulfithe old mission. An OGPU agent with had failed twice was bound to be serious trouble himself, redeemab only by final success.

Krivitsky began to talk about buyir a gun to protect himself. Waldma pointed out that in New York or Ne Jersey, he would have to get a perm Living under an assumed name, more than ever eager to hide his trac. Krivitsky fumed and said he wouthink it over.

Without telling Waldman, he fou out that no permit was necessary Virginia, but he did say that he was going there to arrange to buy a far Waldman insisted that the reluct Russian testify before a New York I islative committee investigating comunism in the schools, and Krivit wanted the appearance date postpountil after the Virginia trip. His he ing was set for Monday, Feb. 10.

The Friday before, he took the tr south. He stopped off in Washingtor see Loy Henderson, mentioning new fears and his decision to buy a ; for self-defense. Then he went on the farm near Charlottesville.

The Doberts listened to his explations and answered his unend stream of questions, but they could help feeling dubious.

"I just couldn't see Walter as chicken farmer," Marguerite said la "He was a total intellectual, just the type."

Krivitsky was a man without I bies, without interest in sports, nature, in the use of his hands or for the pleasure of it. It was the bithat did all his working and living he went on endlessly about the fathe chores, the cost.

All that remained to settle the of he said, was for his wife Tonya to he a look and give her agreement. To and their son Alek, then 6, had stabehind in New York that weekend

Krivitsky went on about his p late into the night. Tired from day's work, the Doberts went to but after a short time, Krivitknocked on their door. He had a headache and couldn't sleep, he said

Marguerite, a tall, warm woman great practical competence and street good cheer, handed him some as and writing paper from behind door. She wished him goodnight.

But her guest was restless. The morning he told them that he coolda's aleep after writing his letters and had gone for a walk in the weeds. He spoke appreciatively of the countryside, especially the isolation. It's safe and peaceful here, he told the Doberts.

"He was nervous," Marguerite said later, "but then he always was. Afterward, I couldn't help thinking that I should have noticed more carefully whether there was something wrong. But I didn't, I didn't think of anything. He was the usual high-strung Walter."

Target Practice

SATURDAY MORNING, Krivitsky and Marguerite Dobert drove into Charlottesville. They went to a hardware store and bought a gun without any difficulty. Later, the clerk identified the gun as the one found in the hotel room and he identified Mrs. Dobert and a photograph of Krivitsky as the customers who had bought it.

For some reason never brought out, he sold mushroom bullets as ammunition instead of ordinary bullets, unusual for sale to a person explaining that he lived in a wilderness and needed something to protect himself. When he spoke about the gun, according to all those who heard him, Krivitsky talked only in terms of his urgent need for self-protection after the warning he had received.

The next day, Marguerite Dobert drove Krivitsky back to Washington so he could catch a train. He mentioned his appointment in New York on Monday morning. She took a wrong turning on the way and for a time they wandered about country roads. Later, she remembered that as evidence that they had not been followed because she would have noticed another car on the back roads.

Before she dropped him at the corner of Union Station, she asked Krivitsky if he wanted her to mall the letters he had mentioned writing late Friday night. He said he would look after them himself. She asked him if he had remembered his "artillery." He patted the canvas bag that was his only luggage and said it was in there.

Krivitsky asked her whether Union Station, like railroad stations in most big European cities, had facilities for travelers to bathe. There was no running water on the farm and he wanted to clean up while he was waiting for the next New York train. She didn't know the answer.

But she did know, looking back, that it was an altogether normal conversation with every sign that Krivitsky was intent only on boarding the train, no sign that he had other plans.

But he never left Washington. He went to the Bellevue Hotel, a hyeminute walk from the station. No one knows whether he went there directly or entered the station first and then changed his mind. No one knows whether he saw someone in or around the station who frightened him.

The Bellevue had no record of his making any telephone calls from his room. Its residents and staff paid no special attention to the man who registered as Walter Poref until the maid called the housekeeper to his room the next morning.

No photographs were taken in the hotel room to establish the trajectory of the bullet; no effort was taken to recover the bullet from the wall; no fingerprints were sought. All this was common practice when there was any suspicion of crime. But the immediate police assumption was that they were dealing with a clear-cut case of suicide, and the coroner took their word for it that afternoon.

A Question of Style

Waldman, Tonya Krivitsky and other people spoke out to challenge the verdict. Waldman hurried to Washington. It was too late to seek evidence at the scene of Krivitsky's death; everything had been tidied.

There was no doubt that Krivitsky had died with his brains blown out, but no absolute proof that the gun found in his room was the weapon used nor that he and no one else had pulled the trigger. All that was left was the body, the three notes and the long Krivitsky story with its heavily charged undertones.

The notes looked self-explanatory to the police, but to people who knew Krivitsky, they looked strange in many details. It was his handwriting, all right, and it was on the same kind of paper that the Doberts had given him at their Virginia farm. But the style was not quite typical of Krivitsky.

Each note carried a sentence beneath the signature. He had never been a man to write postscripts, a man to have afterthoughts. All who knew him agreed that he always was clear in his mind on what he wanted to say and stopped when he had said it.

Each P.S. mentioned third persons. The note to Waldman had an added item referring to the Doberts, though not by name. The note to Suzanne Lafollette mentioned her brother and sister-in-law, though they scarcely knew Krivitsky. He was a man thoroughly trained to recognize the implications of involvement in scandal. It was odd that he should drag the names of irrelevant people into his personal tragedy.

Even more inexplicable to his in mates was the vague, allusive tone the notes. They said nothing speci about any intention of killing himse or why. The nearest they came to telf-justification that is the one costant to expect in suicide notes was general reference to the inescapat obligation to "go." Only the note to have Tonya went that far. It said:

"This is very difficult and I want live very badly, but it is impossible love you, my only one. It is difficult for me to write, but think about and then you will understand that must go. Don't tell Alex yet where I father is gone. I believe that in tinyou will tell him because it is best in him. Forgive, it is very hard to write Take care of him and be a good moth to him, and be always quiet and new get angry at him.

"He is very good, and always ve pale. Good people will help you, b not enemies. I think my friends are b. I see you, Tonya and Alex. I embra you. Vela.

"P.S. On the farm of Dobertov wrote this yesterday, but I did n have any strength in New York. I d not have any business in Washingto I went to see Dobertov because that the only place I could get the firearm

It had been written in Russian. Mi Krivitsky challenged the police tranlation as soon as she saw the not Instead of rendering the first sentento suggest that Krivitsky found "impossible" to live, she said, a corretranslation would be:

"It is very difficult but I want ve badly to live, but to live is no long allowed me."

Inference of Coercion

THE LOGIC of the situation and the man seemed to dictate that legis mate auicide notes would have resquite differently, with some mention of the OGPU's hounding him, his disclusionment with Moscow, his problem in creating a new life in the Unite States. If Krivitsky did choose to k himself, these were doubtless the resons, and he was not given to crypt or fuzzy expressions.

Of course, a man's state of mind contemplating suicide is likely enoug to be illogical. No certain deduction could be made from the notes. By their very oddness served to convincing the wife and other intimates that I had been cunning to the end.

The notes read, they felt, as Kriwitchy had been forced to writhem and had cannily found words ar forms that would reveal mortal blackmail to the addressees but not to the blackmailer, however astute he might be.

"I believe," the widow told the press, "the letter (to her) was written under coercion. The OGPU had threatened that they would kidnap or harm me and our child unless he did what they directed—kill himself. He made this bargain because of his great love for us. But he was murdered in this fashion just as surely as though they had pulled the trigger of the gun."

Waldman argued passionately for an FBI investigation. It was refused on the ground that a possible murder in the District of Columbia was not a Federal but a local crime and that jurisdiction rested entirely with the Metropolitan Police. The lawyer pointed out that Krivitsky had been and was likely to have continued to be a witness before congressional committees and grand juries, and that could have been a proper basis for an FBI investigation.

After 24 hours of hullabaloo in the press and a Congressman's speech deploring inefficient, negligent police work on the case, the Washington police reluctantly reopened it. They interviewed the maid, the housekeeper, the bellboy and the hotel manager though not, apparently, the guests in the rooms adjacent to Krivitsky.

They checked the empty shell found on the floor and confirmed that it was fired from Krivitsky's .38. It was too late to look for fingerprints on the gun. It had been covered with blood when the police first arrived and had been cleaned in the meantime.

Invented a Telegram

REPORTERS TRACKED DOWN Mrs. Dobert on her farm. She had first learned of Krivitsky's death from the Tuesday morning papers at her friend's house in Washington, where she had spent the night after leaving Krivitsky at the station. At first she refused to believe it, still sure that he had returned to New York the previous Sunday. But there was his picture and photostats of the notes in his handwriting.

Distraught and bewildered, she invented for her hostess a telegram from her husband asking her to come home quickly. She drove off without a word about the affair. But when it came out that she had brought Krivitsky to Washington and was one of the last to see him, her evidence was sought.

Detective Chief Bernard W. Thompson reported to the press that "now, as before we are convinced that Krivitsky killed himself." The Washington Post reporter added in his account. "Thompson stressed the words 'as before,' emphasizing that almost from the moment he was found . . . investigators have deemed the death a suicide." The police were smarting under the charge of inexcusably aloppy work when the body was found.

The only thing Mrs. Dobert was able to say to repeated questions about Krivitsky's state of mind when she left him, and about clues to his intentions from his behavior over the weekend, was: "He did tell me, 'If anything should happen to me, look after Alex and Tonya.' That was on the drive back to Washington on Sunday. I said, 'Don't be silly, Walter. Nothing will happen to you.' He didn't argue with that. He was calm and cheerful, still full of plans about the farm."

Ideological Debate

HE REAFFIRMED coroner's verdict did not end the excited public argument. Pressed again, the FEI said that it "did not and is not going to investigate the case." The spokesman was S. J. Tracy in the office of J. Edgar Hoover, who did not personally make a public comment or agree to receive Waldman.

Newspapers with strong anti-Communist editorial policies kept up the clamor for a few days, reviewing some of Krivitsky's life and other cases of OGPU assassinations beyond Soviet borders. Newspapers with strong leftist editorial policies answered derisively.

Ben Hecht wrote in PM: "Swinging Roman candles over its head, blowing smoke out of its ears, complete with electric-lighted nose, fright wig and fire gong hitched to its fanny, the Press is galumphing up and down the highways looking for the scoundrel who murdered that darling man, Gen. Walter Krivitsky . . . The point and purpose of the Rumpelstiltskin manhunt is to blow up the deviltries of Stalinism and allow Moscow, rather than Berlin, to frighten the pants off everybody . . .

"The Red Menace being pumped out of the comatose Krivitsky is on your corner newsstand. And the presses printing it are not being supervised by OGPU and Gestapo chieftains, knout in hand. It is, nevertheless, as giddy an example of the cynical contempt for readers' intelligence as ever came over the short waves from Europe..."

Ralph Ingersoll, also in PM, poured scorn on the fuss and asked with righteous indignation why Krivitsky's death deserved more attention than the seven lines reporting the suicide of a Brooklyn clothing worker on the same day. "Where is our conscience....?" he demanded "What treacherous OGPU lives in us that we must accept and take into our hearts any dirty rat?"

A Belated Interest

THEN THE EXCHANGES of vitu peration shifted to other topics other news. Nobody reported seein Hans Bruesse again. Twenty-five year later, intelligence services in the United States and Western Europ would, in the words of one officia "give an eyetooth to find him." The no longer doubt his existence.

After the war, the FBI did develo an interest in the Krivitsky case an its implications. It began collecting file which is still secret. Suicide is n longer a firmly held official judgmen But neither has any new evidence emerged to prove that Krivitsky war murdered, by another or by his ow hand under threat of dire harm to h wife and the son he adored.

The boy has grown up now and an engineer living a normal life undanother name. The widow, who all uses another name, still lives in Ne York, ill after all the years of despers struggle to earn a living and prote her son. They are no longer afraid, by they have had nothing more to do will politics since that February day in 19

The proof of exactly what happen must lie in Soviet police archives, mo secret even than the guarded FBI at CIA flies on the case, for whether t OGPU engineered Krivitsky's death simply sat by and won its goal withce exertion, reports had to be made.

But even as a riddle, Krivitsk story illuminated a period and sanguine aftermath. The frenzy of t postwar Communist bunts had roots in the prewar propaganda batt and the lackadaisical unconcern security in those days.

Nobody responsible then bother much with the kind of problem Krisky evoked. Then, as now, manhouted at each other to advance the arguments. Few looked to the orce hand.
